Why are Cuban cigars so popular?

We asked an expert and he told us this: I have been a cigar maker for 61 years. In luxury humidor , cigars are made from five types of leaves: a leaf called light, which is the one that gives strength in the cigar; another leaf called seco, the one that gives aroma; and a leaf called blown up, which is responsible for the combustion in the cigar. The light, dry, and flown are wrapped with the binder. Finally, cuban cohiba cigars , which I am doing, is the wrapper, which is what gives the cigar its presence." In some cases, the Cuban cigar represents power, money, class. and in others a hobby, healing, routine

Things to keep in mind to have a perfect Cuban cigar

There are four things that make a cigar unique that makes it the best in the world. Growing black tobacco involves the soil, the climate, the manual labor, and the type of tobacco used. The strain has been taken more than once, the seed has been taken, and the workmanship has also been taken. Yet, it has not been achieved in the same way in all the places where it has been put under similar conditions

Conclusion

Taste and enjoyment of any consumable are subjective. The allure of Cuban cigars is somewhat based on prestige, as Cuban cigars have been a status symbol in society for over a century. Although série d fetch high prices, particularly where they are outlawed in the U.S., in recent years all premium cigars have become uniformly priced. However, despite a growing interest in cigars from other countries, some connoisseurs insist that Cuban cigars are the most authentic.
