

'Minecraft' is Coming to the Wii U on the 17th Of December

While it's possible to feel that Minecraft is available all over the world, gamers have had to look on the popular game launch on all other platforms of the company except Nintendo's. We're pleased to announce: After months and even years of waiting, the Japanese video game maker has announced the Sandbox game will come to the Wii U in December 2017. Minecraft will include a variety of add-ons, which will allow budding builders to get festive in time for Christmas.

games

Mojang also uses the Wii U's Off-TV play feature that allows players to transfer their worlds onto their GamePad controllers, and allow other family members to control of the TV. When Minecraft launches on the Nintendo eShop in North America next week, Minecraft will cost $30 There's no information yet on the price it will cost UK and European gamers.