

Sharing Nudes And Semi-nudes

How can I talk to my child about online nudity?

SEXTING

It is crucial to engage in open conversations with your child from a young age about online activities, and especially the kinds of content they share.

Begin by talking to your child about sharing images and asking them what kind of photos they would be comfortable posting online. This will give you a chance to find out how much they know about what isn't acceptable to share. Remind them to never share or transmit any information that is personal and encourage them to come to you if they're ever asked to share something that makes them feel uncomfortable.

It is possible to discuss with your child the idea of sharing sexually explicit images online, especially if they're older. We understand that this could be a sensitive subject to discuss, therefore we recommend taking a look at Childline's advice for sharing nudes and sexting to provide some suggestions on how to approach it and what language to use.

Be on the lookout for opportunities to begin a conversation casually, such as the storyline on television. This way you can have a conversation about sexting and sharing nudes without it becoming the main focus. Consider how you talk about this more broadly, e.g.
