authentic because they are operated and managed by Nike Inc. The price reduction is due to the slightly defects or the products being old models. The discounted price in a Nike Outlet store is what attracts most buyers. Too many pairs of Nike shoes for basketball? Actually, there is no way that Nike can make too many different colorways of their basketballs shoes. No time in the history of basketball shoes has provided sneakerheads with so many different options when purchasing a pair of kicks. If you, like myself, are one of the hundreds of basketball shoe fanatics that suffers from OCD, you fully understand the conflicting feelings that are aroused by the daily sighting of a sick new sneaker drop. Literally everyday brings a new colorway in a Nike shoe for basketball. The hugely popular Hyperdunk 2011 had released in at least 30 different color versions the last time I counted. The Hyperfuse 2011 is not far behind in the amount of colorways in which it has released. Unless you count the Hyperfuse 2011 Low. In that case the Hyperfuse surpasses the Hyperdunk in amount of releases. And that is just two Nike models among several that they have to offer. On one hand I love having an endless amount of different pairs of basketball shoes to cop. Do I really play enough basketball to justify owning 100 pairs of shoes. And besides, the basketball court is not the only place to rock a sick pair of basketball kicks. All the new colors and designs on basketball shoes is a dream come true for this aging sneakerhead. In the past few years Nike shoes for basketball have released in some unimaginable editions. I am just going to have to settle with a few. That's quite alright, a new pair of Hyperdunk 2011's will do.
