REDWORK PORTRAIT EMBROIDERY CLASS: Join us at the Chapman Museum on Wed. Nov. 7th at 6:00 for a Redwork embroidery class given by embroidery artist Tisha Dolton. Redwork is an outline style of embroidery that was most popular at the turn of the 20th century and refers to the colorfast Turkey Red floss that was used. Tisha's expertise is Redwork portraits and participants will learn how to turn a photograph into an embroidery pattern. We'll learn the Redwork stitch and get our portrait underway. All that participants need to bring is a photo; it can be friend, family member, celebrity or historical figure. All other materials – hoop, floss, material, needle – will be provided. We will have other colors of floss if red is not your color. Cost is $20 and reservations must be prepaid. Call the museum at 518-793-2826 to reserve your spot!

BURIAL PLOTS AVAILABLE: The Norton Cemetery Association in Pittstown has been working on an expansion project for well over 10 years. The Cemetery, located on County Route 111, is one of the pristine cemeteries in Rensselaer County, and all maintained by volunteers. We are pleased to announce the opening of our new West Section. It started out as a dream when a land donation was given to the association. We had outgrown our space and this has truly turned into one of our best assets. After many loads of fill, dozing, more fill, more dozing, seeding, etc. we saw the potential. We also had an Eagle Scout select this area as his project to add a parking lot, garden, the finishing touches and fencing needed. We have completed our survey and are now offering over 200 additional plots to the cemetery. Interested parties should contact our superintendent, Paul D'Avella or Cindy Wagner for further information.

Cargill Develops Industry-First Robotic Cattle Driver

Improving animal welfare and employee safety—that's the top two goals driving the creation of the industry's first robotic cattle mover. Cargill says the robots are designed to move cattle from holding pens to the harvest area at processing plants, reducing stress to the animals by minimizing their proximity to human activity.

Employees operate the robots from a catwalk above the holding pens. This also helps improve worker safety.

It took two years to develop the prototype, including help from Temple Grandin, professor of Animal Science at Colorado State University. Significant input also came from animal welfare experts, beef plant employees and engineers from equipment supplier and manufacturer, Flock Free.

"The robotic cattle driver developed by Cargill is a major innovation in the handling and welfare of farm animals," Grandin says. "This device will lead to huge strides in employee safety while moving large animals and reduce the stress on cattle across the country."

The machine uses automated arms, blowers and audio recordings to move cattle in a desired direction, and can operate in rain, snow, or mud with no delay in daily operations. Testing was conducted at Cargill's Wyalusing, Penn., and Schuyler, Neb., beef processing facilities. The robotics are being implemented at Cargill Protein beef plants in the U.S. and Canada.

"The average bovine weighs almost three quarters of a ton, and our plant processes several thousand head of cattle daily," said Sammy Renteria, general manager of the Cargill beef plant in Schuyler, Neb., in a release from the company. "This innovation provides a much safer workplace for our employees and allows them to develop new technology expertise as they manage and operate the robot."
