As noted by the facioscapulohumeral muscular dystrophy (FSHD) society, myostatin inhibitor clinical trials have begun on humans. The first trials on humans actually started in Feb, 2005. UPDATE: MYO-029 development has been dropped as it is safe but not effective.

Such is the case of Moen, who used a Vaporfly (40 mm sole) to run almost 53 laps of the track until he reached 21,131 metres, lowering the old European record set 44 years ago, with 20,944 metres, by the Dutchman Jos Hermens, and was only 154 metres away from the Ethiopian world record.

Despite the lack of safety data, myostatin inhibitors have become popular athletic supplements to use for purported fast muscle growth . However, there are several potential downsides to myostatin inhibition in people seeking athletic enhancement. The first concern is that no clinical trials have been carried out.

Roche have announced the completion of a planned, interim analysis of the data from their trials of their myostatin inhibitor (called RG6206). The analysis shows that it is unlikely that the drug will meet the goals of the trial, and as a result Roche have halted the clinical development programme.
