

Minecraft Village Locations And All Villager Jobs

Looking for a Minecraft village? Or just want to wrap GAMES around how these cute little towns work? Villages in Minecraft are a great resource for stocking up on items before you explore or brew potions in Minecraft, whether that be trading with Minecraft villagers or unlocking chests tucked away in houses.

A Minecraft village will spawn villagers depending on the number of beds in the village, including farmers, fishermen, fletchers, butchers, clerics, armourers, and more. A Minecraft village features buildings, houses, and a well that's known as the village centre. The type of village is determined by the biome at the village centre or meeting point, where most villagers can be found. Villages spawn naturally and the amount of buildings and village features are randomly generated, including the villagers available to trade with and the location of the village itself. This can make finding a village tricky, but worth the reward.

Our Minecraft village guide covers how to find a village in Minecraft, how to avoid a zombie siege, and the best places to discover Minecraft village loot.

Minecraft village finder

Need to know how to find a village in Minecraft? Minecraft villages can be found in plains, savanna, taiga, snowy tundra, and desert biomes, and generate naturally.

Village features generate randomly, and the number of buildings making up a village can vary, as well as the building structure. So you could find a village with no blacksmiths or one with several.

Minecraft village features include:

- Wood huts
- Small houses
- Large houses
- Butcher's shops
- Libraries
- Farms
- Wells
- Blacksmiths
- Churches
- Lamp posts
- Roads
- Iron golems

Paths weave between the buildings and extend to the outskirts of the village. You can find the location of villages by exploring, either on foot or by flying in Creative mode. To start the game closer to a village, you can use a Minecraft seed with a village next to the spawn.

You can also use the Minecraft village finder to locate coordinates to the nearest village. The following platforms support this Minecraft console command, Java Edition, Pocket Edition, Windows 10 Edition, and Education Edition. Pull up the chat command and type '/locate Village' and press enter to retrieve the coordinates to the nearest village.

Minecraft village trading

Villages in Minecraft will host trading villagers, and you can interact with these Minecraft mobs to purchase and sell different goods. In the Bedrock Edition there is a chance that a wandering trader and trader llamas will spawn at the village meeting point.

By right clicking on a villager you can trade with them. Not all the items you need from a villager will be available with each interaction, but trading with the same villager multiple times will earn you a good reputation with that villager, who will be more likely to offer discounts. Villagers won't always be fair with their trades, so make sure you're not getting ripped off before handing over your emeralds.

Villagers have five career levels that can be increased by trading with them, so it benefits to revisit the same villager. As a villager levels up, from novice, apprentice, journeyman, expert, and eventually master - improved items will be on offer. Villagers have professions and their offerings are defined by their profession, such as a farmer offering bread at novice level, to a golden carrot at master level.

How to summon an Iron Golem

Iron Golems are village protectors and although one Iron Golem will usually spawn with a village, these large passive mobs are pretty simple to summon, although expensive. Having extra muscle to take care of the village inhabitants means you can sleep soundly at night knowing the village people and your Minecraft farm ideas are safe from an untimely explosion from a Creeper.

Here's how to summon an Iron Golem in Minecraft, you can also create a farm, using our Minecraft Iron Golem farm guide:

- 4 x iron blocks
- 1 x carved pumpkin

Place the four iron blocks in a T shape in the overworld (not the item creation screen), with one block on the ground and the remaining three on top. Place the carved pumpkin on top and watch your Iron Golem materialise in front of you.

Minecraft village loot

Chests are randomly generated in houses, and will contain different loot depending on the biome. So, a village desert house chest will contain a dead bush, but a village plains house chest will have an oak sapling. Blacksmiths houses, also known as forges have a chest of loot containing valuable items such as Minecraft diamonds, ingots, iron armour, and rare loot.

Butcher house chests have an array of meats such as beef and mutton, but also coal, and occasionally emeralds. The cartographer chest contains paper, bread, sticks, and other valuable items.

Minecraft zombie villages

A village in Minecraft has a 2% chance of generating as a zombie village. All generated villagers will instead be zombie villagers. Minecraft zombie villages don't have doors or torches and some of the regular village cobblestone are replaced by cobwebs, and glass panes are replaced by brown stained glass panes. Zombies in Minecraft also have a 10% chance of appearing at midnight if there are at least 20 villagers and 10 or more doors - then a zombie siege will occur.

Minecraft village raids

Here's one to watch out for: you can cause a raid to happen in a Minecraft village if you enter one while afflicted by the Bad Omen status effect. You get this effect by killing a raid captain, which may spawn among Illagers, but you can remove it easily by drinking milk or waiting for it to wear off.

If you're up for a challenge, you can keep the Bad Omen status effect and use it to cause an Illager raid by visiting a village in Minecraft. This will cause several waves of Illagers, Evokers, Witches, Vindicators, and Ravagers to spawn, who will attack the player and any villagers. Defeating these enemies will reward you with emeralds, saddles, and tons of other hard-to-find items, while wiping out all the raid waves will give you a temporary discount on the emerald cost to buy items from villagers.

Finding a village in Minecraft is half the battle, but once you arrive to a haven of goodies, a welcome from the local villagers and wonderful offerings from the village occupants, it will all seem worth it. Just be sure to be kind to the villagers if you see an iron golem roaming about; they don't take kindly to their villagers being attacked or hustled. If you need somewhere to store your loot and items acquired from villager traders, our guide to building a Minecraft house will give you all the inspiration you need.
