SIGNS OF CLOGGED DRAINS

There are many reasons that people get clogged drains, and there are many signs that you might have a clogged sewer pipe or regular pipe inside the home. For instance, you might have noticed that your toilet doesn't flush very well. Otherwise, maybe there's sewage backup in the basement drains. Another sign of a clog in your sewer main line is a rotten smell coming from the drains.

One of the reasons that many people experience problems with clogs in their drains is because something was put down a sink or toilet that shouldn't have gone into the plumbing. For instance, you should never put liquid animal fat down your drains because it can harden in the pipes. Another common reason that you might have clogged drains is the presence of roots in your main line, which will create a blockage. Otherwise, if your pipes are older, you might also have a problem with buildup of minerals inside of the pipes, which can cause the pipes to narrow in places.

OUR DRAIN CLEANING SERVICES

There are many reasons that a drain can become clogged, and there are some fairly simple ways of pulling out the clog. One of the most commonly known ways of getting rid of a clog is by drain snaking. Whether your toddler decided to flush their blanket down the toilet or your favorite tree in the front yard has long roots that have begun to infiltrate the main line, a drain snake can often take care of the problem. At Plumbing Professionals, we use a professional-grade snake to get rid of stubborn clogs. Be sure to get in touch with us to learn more about our drain cleaning services.

THE DANGERS OF DIY DRAIN CLEANING

DIY projects have been in fashion for about the last decade, but while it's fine to go ahead and put up a bookshelf or install those French doors, you might want to re-think your impulse to clean out the drain yourself. There are some jobs that are better left to the professionals, and many types of plumbing are included in that list.

One of the first reasons that you shouldn't clean out your own drains is that you might damage your plumbing fixtures or even the pipes if you try something and don't know what you're doing. If you end up doing a couple of hundred or a couple of thousand dollars worth of damage to your pipes, the DIY project no longer looks like such an inexpensive way to go. You should also be aware that just because a problem seems similar to something that you've seen before doesn't mean that it's really the same problem. You might think that you know where the clog is, but there are sometimes plumbing issues with similar symptoms. Finally, if you smell any kind of sewer odor, you want to clean it up right away because sewer air can make you and your family sick.
