Home Intravenous Antibiotic Therapy

A peripherally inserted central catheter, or PICC line, can be used to deliver IV medication to patients with serious infections who require long courses of treatment but don't need to be in the hospital.

A PICC line is typically placed in a large vein in the upper arm.

One end of the thin, flexible, plastic tube is left outside the body; the other end sits in the vein close to the heart.

The patient or caregiver delivers medication into the bloodstream through the catheter end.

La causa mas frecuente es la diabetes, seguida de los TCE y procesos intracraneales como los aneurismas de comunicante posterior o tumores cerebrales. En cualquier caso, en este paciente puede descartarse la etiologia diabetica porque tiene comprometida la funcion pupilar, y es tipico que este preservada en los diabeticos. Las fibras parasimpaticas que acompanan al III par se situan en la periferia, de manera que procesos isquemicos como la diabetes afectaran al interior de la vaina nerviosa, cuyo aporte vascular a cargo de los vasa nervorum es mas deficiente. Por el contrario, si se afecta el componente parasimpatico, como en este caso, indica que hay una compresion extrinseca del nervio a lo largo de su recorrido intracraneal, siendo una manifestacion tipica de los aneurismas de la arteria comunicante posterior  que posiblemente tenga este paciente -, o de la herniacion transtentorial en pacientes en coma.
