Fights in Pirate101 are turn-primarily based and happen on a grid. She sails a ship, loots treasure, hangs out in seedy bars, and fights anybody who stands between her and the fame and fortune she so rightly deserves. Every flip, you progress your character and crewmembers across the grid, choose skills, after which watch each assault play out. With my foes dispatched, Mr. Gandry, Boochbeard, my karate-chopping crewmember, and i made haste to a waiting ship, then set sail throughout the skies of The Spiral. On the negative facet, waiting for different players to decide on their moves (a process that may take as much as 30 seconds per flip) and sitting by means of the combat animations of you, your crewmembers, each different character, every other character's crewmembers, and each single enemy can start to feel tedious over time. Combat is straightforward on the floor, however I sensed a substantial amount of potential depth simply waiting for a higher-degree character with extra crewmembers and a wider array of talents. Test your self every day and when the time comes to be tested by your Sensei or by your friends, you will be greater than ready.
