

Factors to Look for When Buying Disposable Vape Pens

Disposable vapes are to vape pens what training wheels are to bicycles. They're available for the most part dispensaries and cost around $15-20. Arriving many different brands and strain-specific flavors, disposable vape pens don't have rechargeable batteries so you don't have to worry about a dead battery unless most of the extract can also be gone - in which case, you'd just throw it away.

While there are numerous brands and flavors to pick from, finding the right one(s) can be overwhelming; so we've caused it to be easier. Here are a few simple things you can do to optimize your vaping experience.

1. Ask just how many hits a brand new pen gets. Each pen should allow you to get a minimum of 100 hits, well over 200. Depending on whether it's filled up with wax or oil, the measurement may differ so ensure that you ask just how many doses the amount equates to.
2. Test the pen before you leave the shop. Even if you have to unpack it and it will take an additional minute of every day, you do not want to leave the shop with a bad pen. Dispensary refund policies are rare.
3. Choose a brand that's your favorite strain. Several companies make specific pens based on popular strains. If Sour Diesel is what you'd normally smoke, you won't have trouble getting a disposable with SD.
4. Do your research. Spend some time on message boards, do google searches, and ask friends and/or family which disposable vape pens they like most.
