

Mothers can make a difference when they collaborate to help their children.

Coalition of Mothers Against Censorship is back in action. After the Summer 2020 unrest and the a majority of those who suffered were mothers. Their sons and daughters were out protesting different causes, and mothers were at home, waiting, dreading the moment their children come home and require medical care. Because of the pandemic, heading to emergency rooms for minor issues didn't sound smart, you could get Covid in worst case just by going in the room, which is why most times, mothers will rather take care of their kids at home, covering their cuts and cracks with love with lots of sanitizers, and bandaids of course.

Even months later, CoMAC comes out trying to convince the government this isn't true. Did you watch those protest videos, or are they just me? Have you noticed something? It's easy to see how police treated peaceful protesters. They would spray them with water, then run through the crowd. You can watch these videos on Youtube Twitter, Facebook as well as Youtube. You can also download videos from Youtube. The internet doesn't have the right to preserve evidence of improper conduct. When someone says they've seen the videois on YouTube, it can be deleted. It will be erased from the accounts of eyewitnesses and firsthand accounts.

Did you know that the police could play popular music while being recorded to activate copyright mechanisms when the video is posted on Youtube and other websites which respect digital rights. Another tactic is to conceal evidence. In the long run, practices of ignoring truthful sources and ignoring them are another reason to sweep it under the rug. Youtube and twitter-hosted videos can be removed because of false copyright claims. CoMAC sometimes needs to monitor uploaders of videos to ensure that evidence is available. Moms join forces to provide emotional support, and provide their support to their extended families across the country. We need to rise up and put aside evidence that demonstrates the brutality of government workers towards otherwise peaceful protesters.

Mothers are the ones who are at the forefront of the news simply because they love their children, who bring home all the smoke of the frontlines. This isn't how our children are taught to live in safety. We must be in control of our surroundings. Only by taking personal responsibility and better oversight by the government can we prosper as a nation, and overcome our problems with grace , while holding on to just intentions.
