10 “SIMPLE” RULES

- Isu writings do differ slightly between similar translations, implying the Isu were not monolithic as we once thought
- Isu precluded our Indo-European/Latin languages, and is often structured similarly
- Subjects begin sentences, predicates end the phrase, all descriptors in between
- Adjectives always preclude the noun they refer to
- Genitive case symbols ˆ/ˆ/ˆ always begin the suffix of the word it refers to.
- Gendered or possessive words always suffix a gendered symbol Ɔ
- Conjugated “is/to be” Ɔ/Ɔ/Ɔ/Ɔ/Ɔ always ends the suffix of the word it’s attached to, unless followed with a passive participle ˆˆ
- Preposition symbols Ɔ always end the suffix of the noun it refers to, or the preposition word itself follows the noun it describes
- “To/For” symbols ˆ are noted after the verb they refer to
(For example: “axes to cut” looks like ƆƆƆˆ Ɔˆˆˆ ˆ)
- Numbers are converted into hexadecimal and always begin with “•”
