Drawing on the material provided, critically evaluate the relevance of the concepts of the psychological contract and employee engagement to workers.
Use the example of Uber drivers, employed in the ‘gig economy’.

The concepts of psychological contract and employee engagement to workers are recognized as fundamental concepts in order to understand the relationship between employees and employers. These concepts have been developed in contemporary organizational theory and now provide researchers with the knowledge to understand the mutual perceptions, beliefs and informal obligations that shape the relationship and this is why they added to organizational theory. Their significance is particularly crucial in the context of the modern working conditions where traditional forms of employment relationship are being replaced by entirely new forms of employment where the links between two parties are more flexible than it was in the past. A good example to serve as an common example of such a new form of employment is the labour market where freelance work and short-term contracts become increasingly popular and replace permanent jobs. Such a tendency may be observed in many
