"Is there a point here or are we just being beat by a blunt object?" One of my direct reports spewed that out like a bad dinner coming up after a night of drinking. It wasn't the most politically correct thing to say to the McKinseyite's leading the meeting but it was effective. It was about like tossing a hand grenade on the table. It took place during the height of our change efforts at Compaq in the mid-nineties. Change was everywhere but nothing was changing. we were in a meeting!

Time: When you start the meeting assign a timekeeper. Decide in advance how long it should take and don't go over by one minute. On one consulting/turnaround gig we did the CEO routinely, as in every single meeting, came in and dominated the conversation causing a one hour meeting to run to three and four and many times they ran into the night.
