A Title IX investigation can have devastating consequences for students. Not only does it ruin their reputation, but it can cost the student their scholarship. In addition to losing scholarships and financial aid, a Title IX investigation can lead to expulsion or disciplinary charges on their record. This can impact a student's ability and ability to continue their education, get a job, or start a family. This is why a qualified attorney is so important.

You must be aware of your rights as a college student and those of other students. In addition to your rights, you must be protected from discrimination in every area. While it is illegal to discriminate against sexes in educational institutions, it does not prohibit colleges from hiring the right people. But many people still face discrimination on a daily basis - in the classroom, on athletic fields, and in housing.
