One of the aspects that I really like about MMOs is just how dang enjoyable the construct-as much as launch can be. You can die of thirst, you can die of hunger, you can die from accidents, and you'll die of zombie infection.

Most likely, though, you'll die at the hands of one other player, and this loss of life will happen inside 10 minutes of your logging into the sport. Cube World is an adventure recreation, and fans of MMOs will find it far closer to World of Warcraft or Guild Wars 2 than it's to the game that threatens huts with Creepers and allows you to build full-scale replicas of pretend spaceships. At all times. Basic chat will scroll like a manic stock-ticker that's investing in World of Warcraft comparisons, players will run round in a frantic state until they discover their guild-mommy, forest boars shall be camped without sympathy, and some dumb shmo will go without sleep and ample nutrition for 86 straight hours until he hits the level cap. There is no such thing as a real motive to align a technique or another, so most players seem to take the ganking route for the easy kills and free tools. There is a free beta key in each box. The non-disclosure agreements are such a cute concept when you consider that a company is making an attempt to apply them wholesale to a group that's used to open information and a free alternate of ideas, often in the type of Wikipedia edit wars.
