

Heroes

Heroes

Mass Murder and Suicide

Franco 'Bifo' Berardi

VERSO

London • New York

First published by Verso 2015
© Francesco Berardi 2015

All rights reserved

The moral rights of the author have been asserted

1 3 5 7 9 10 8 6 4 2

Verso

UK: 6 Meard Street, London W1F 0EG
US: 20 Jay Street, Suite 1010, Brooklyn, NY 11201
www.versobooks.com

Verso is the imprint of New Left Books

ISBN-13: 978-1-78168-578-5 (PB)
ISBN-13: 978-1-78168-577-8 (HC) eISBN-13: 978-1-78168-579-2 (US)
eISBN-13: 978-1-78168-752-9 (UK)

British Library Cataloguing in Publication Data

A catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

A catalog record for this book is available from the Library of Congress

Typeset in Sabon by Hewer Text UK Ltd, Edinburgh, Scotland
Printed in the US by Maple Press

Acknowledgements

I want express my gratitude to some friends who, more or less consciously, have helped me to write this book.

Thanks to Marco Magagnoli, also known as Mago, for his telepathic inspiration. Thanks to Max Geraci for helping me to sense the colourful meaning of darkness. Thanks to Federico Campagna for his friendship and for his countless suggestions.

Four Notes in Guise of a Prologue

1

I decided to write this book in July 2012, after reading about the mass shooting in Aurora, Colorado, that had taken place at a movie theatre screening the latest Batman film. A mixture of repulsion and perverse fascination has always lured me to read voraciously about the perpetrators of this kind of mass murder, a kind that seems to be proliferating at the moment – particularly in the United States of America. But it was only when I read about James Holmes and the Aurora massacre that I decided to write about the subject. I was not spurred into action by the violence and absurdity of a country where any person, no matter whether mentally disturbed, can buy deadly weapons. We are all quite accustomed to that. What most impressed me was the metaphorical density of an act that could be interpreted as breaking the separation between spectacle and real life (or real death, which is the same). I doubt that James Holmes has ever read Guy Debord. Often, people act without reading the relevant texts. Yet Holmes's gesture carried a tang of situationism. The whole history of the twentieth-century vanguard was reconvened there, and monstrously restaged. ‘Abolish art abolish daily life abolish the separation between art and daily life’, the Dadaists said. Holmes, it struck me, wanted to eliminate the separation between the spectator and the movie; he wanted to be in the movie.

So I began to read compulsively about the massacre at the screening of the Batman movie. My interest led me to news stories about other males (white, black, old, young, rich, poor, but only males, no women at all – who knows why?) who shoot and kill people, and to further research into previous mass murders. From these studies, I came to the realization that the current becoming of the world could be better understood if observed through this kind of horrible madness, rather than through the polite madness of economists and politicians. I saw the agony of capitalism and the dismantling of social civilization from a very peculiar point of view: crime and suicide.

The naked reality of capitalism is today on display. And it’s horrible.

2

The subject of this book is not merely crime and suicide, but more broadly the establishment of a kingdom of nihilism and the suicidal drive that is permeating contemporary culture, together with a phenomenology of panic, aggression and resultant violence. This is the point of view from which I’m looking at mass murder, focusing in particular on the spectacular implications of these acts of killing, and on their suicidal dimension.

I don’t care about the conventional serial killer, the brand of secretive sadistic psychopaths who are attracted to other people's suffering and enjoy seeing people die. I'm interested in people who are suffering themselves, and who become criminals because this is their way both to express their psychopathic need for publicity and also to find a suicidal exit from their present hell. I write about young people like Seung-Hui Cho, Eric Harris, Dylan Klebold, and Pekka-Erik Auvinen, who killed themselves after trying to attract the attention of the world by ending the lives of innocent people. I also write of James Holmes, who committed a sort of symbolic suicide without actually killing himself.

I write about spectacular murderous suicides because these killers are the extreme manifestation of one of the main trends of our age. I see them as the heroes of an age of nihilism and spectacular stupidity: the age of financial capitalism.

3

In the book The Wretched of the Screen, Hito Steyerl recalls David Bowie's 1977 release of the single 'Heroes'.

'He sings of a new brand of hero, just in time for the neoliberal revolution and for the digital transformation of the world. The hero is dead – long live the hero! Yet Bowie's hero is no longer a subject, but an object: a thing, an image, a splendid fetish – a commodity soaked with desire, resurrected from beyond the squalor of its own demise. Just look at a 1977 video of the song and you'll understand why: the clip shows Bowie singing to himself from three simultaneous angles, with layering techniques tripling his image; not only has Bowie's hero been cloned, he has above all become an image that can be reproduced, multiplied, and copied, a riff that travels effortlessly through commercials for almost anything, a fetish that packages Bowie's glamorous and unfazed post-gender look as product. Bowie's hero is no longer a larger-than-life human being carrying out exemplary and sensational exploits, and he is not even an icon, but a shiny product endowed with post-human beauty: an image and nothing but an image. This hero's immortality no longer originates in the strength to survive all possible ordeals, but from its ability to be xeroxed, recycled, and reincarnated. Destruction will alter its form and appearance, yet its substance will be untouched. The immortality of the thing is its finitude, not its eternity. In 1977, the punk band The Stranglers delivers a crystal-clear analysis of the situation by stating the obvious: heroism is over. Trotsky, Lenin, and Shakespeare are dead. In 1977, as leftists flock to the funerals of RAF members Andreas Baader, Gudrun Ensslin, and Jan Carl Raspe, The Stranglers' album cover delivers its own giant wreath of red carnations and declares: NO MORE HEROES. Anymore.<sup>1</sup>

In the classical tradition, the hero belonged to the sphere of the epic imagination, separate from tragedy and lyrics. The hero was someone who subjugated Nature and dominated the events of history with the strength of will and of courage. He founded the city and warded off the demonic forces of chaos. This vision can still be found in the time of the Renaissance, and Machiavelli's prince can be considered the hero of modern political narration: the man who establishes the nation state, builds the infrastructures of industry and gives shape to a common identity.

1 Hito Steyerl, The Wretched of the Screen, p. XX.

This epic form of heroism disappeared towards the end of modernity, when the complexity and speed of human events overwhelmed the force of the will. When chaos prevailed, epic heroism was replaced by gigantic machines of simulation. The space of the epic discourse was occupied by semi-corporations, apparatuses for the emanation of widely shared illusions. These games of simulation often took the shape of identities, as with popular subcultures like rock, punk, cyberculture and so on. Here lies the origin of the late-modern form of tragedy: at the threshold where illusion is mistaken for reality, and identities are perceived as authentic forms of belonging. It is often accompanied by a desperate lack of irony, as humans respond to today's state of permanent deterritorialization by enacting their craving for belonging through a chain of acts of murder, suicide, fanaticism, aggression, war.

I believe that it is only through irony and through a conscious understanding of the simulation at the heart of the heroic game, that the simulated hero of subculture still has a chance to save itself.

4

In the year 1977 human history came to a turning point. Heroes died, or, better said, they disappeared. They were not killed by the foes of heroism, rather they transferred to another dimension: they dissolved, they turned into ghosts. So the human race, misled by mock heroes made of deceptive electromagnetic substance, lost faith in the reality of life and its pleasures, and started believing only in the infinite proliferation of images. 1977 was the year when heroes faded and transmigrated from the world of physical life and historical passion to the world of visual simulation and nervous stimulation. That year was a watershed: from the age of human evolution the world shifted to the age of de-evolution, or de-civilization.

What had been produced by labour and social solidarity in the centuries of modernity started to fall under finance's predatory process of de-realization. The conflictive alliance between industrious bourgeois and industrial workers – which had left the public education system, health care, transportation, and welfare as the material legacy of the modern age – was sacrificed to the religious dogma of the Market-God.

In the second decade of the twenty-first century the post-bourgeois dilapidation took the form of a financial black hole. This new system started to swallow and destroy the product of two hundred years of industriousness and of collective intelligence, and transformed the concrete reality of social civilization into abstraction: figures, algorithms, mathematical ferocity and accumulation of nothing in the form of money. The seductive force of simulation transformed physical forms into vanishing images, submitted visual art to spam spreading, and subjected language to the fake regime of advertising. At the end of this process, real life disappeared into the black hole of financial accumulation.

The question now is to see what's left of the human subjectivity and sensibility and of our ability to imagine, to create and to invent. Are humans still able to emerge from this black hole; to invest their energy in a new form of solidarity and mutual help? The sensibility of a generation of children who have learned more words from machines than from their parents appears to be unable to develop solidarity, empathy and autonomy. History has been replaced by the endless flowing recombination of fragmentary images. Random recombination of frantic precarious activity has taken the place of political awareness and strategy. I really don't know if there is hope beyond the black hole; if there lies a future beyond the immediate future.

Where there is danger, however, salvation also grows – said Hölderlin, the poet most loved by Heidegger, the philosopher who foresaw the future destruction of the future. Now, the task at hand is to map the wasteland where social imagination has been frozen and submitted to the recombinant corporate imaginary. Only from this cartography can we move forward to discover a new form of activity which, by replacing Art, politics and therapy with a process of re-activation of sensibility, might help humankind to recognize itself again.

Bibliography

- Aiken, Taylor G., 'What Presbyterians Believe', Presbyterian Journal 18: 27, January 1960, 5–7
- American Psychiatric Association, Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders, Fifth Edition, May 2013
- Brzezinski, Zbigniew, Interview with Le nouvel observateur, January 1989
- Baudrillard, Jean, Le miroir de la production, Paris: Castermann, 1973 (English translation: Baudrillard, Jean, The Mirror of Production, trans. Mark Poster, New York: Telos Press, 1975)
- Baudrillard, Jean, L'échange symbolique et la mort, Paris, 1976 (English translation: Baudrillard, Jean, 'Symbolic Exchange and Death', in Selected Writings, ed. Mark Poster, Stanford University Press, Stanford 1988)
- Baudrillard, Jean, 'Simulacra and Simulations', Selected Writings, ed. Mark Poster, Stanford: Stanford University Press, 1988, 166–84
- Baudrillard, Jean, 'The Spirit of Terrorism', Le Monde, 2 November 2001
- Benda, Julien, Discours à la nation européenne, Paris: Gallimard, 1933

- Benslama, Fethi, La psychanalyse à l'épreuve de l'Islam, Paris: Flammarion, 2002
- Borchgrevink, Aage, A Norwegian Tragedy, Cambridge: Polity Press, 2013
- Breivik, Anders Behring, 2083: A European Declaration of Independence, 2011, <https://info.publicintelligence.net/AndersBehringBreivikManifesto.pdf>
- Brzezinski, Zbigniew, Interview with Le nouvel observateur, January 1989
- Burton, Tim, Burton on Burton, ed. Mark Salisbury, London: Faber & Faber, 2006
- Cass, Alden, Brian F. Shaw and Sydney Le Blanc, Bullish Thinking: The Advisor's Guide to Surviving and Thriving on Wall Street, Hoboken, NJ: Wiley & Sons, Inc., 2008
- Cho, Seung-Hui, 'Manifesto', transcript, 2007
- Corbin, Henry, History of Islamic Philosophy, London: Kegan Paul International, 1993
- Crary, Jonathan, 24/7: Late Capitalism and the Ends of Sleep, London: Verso, 2013
- Danner, Mark, 'Words in a Time of War: On Rhetoric, Truth and Power', in Szántó, András, What Orwell Didn't Know: Propaganda and the New Face of American Politics, New York: Public Affairs, 2007
- Davis, Wade, The Serpent and the Rainbow, New York: Touchstone, 1985
- Davis, Wade, Passage of Darkness: The Ethnobiology of the Haitian Zombie, New York: Simon and Schuster, 1988
- Dejours, Christophe, La Souffrance au travail, Paris: Éditions du seuil, 1998
- DeLillo, Don, White Noise, New York: Viking, 1985
- Deleuze, Gilles and Félix Guattari, What Is Philosophy?, New York: Columbia University Press, 1994

- Deleuze, Gilles and Félix Guattari, Anti-Oedipus: Capitalism and Schizophrenia, Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press, 1983
- Dick, Philip K., Do Androids Dream of Electric Sheep?, New York: Ballantine Books, 1968
- Du Roy, Ivan, Orange stressé, Paris: La Decouverte, 2009
- Eco, Umberto, 'Ur-Fascism', New York Review of Books, 22 June 1995
- Eggers, Dave, The Circle, London: Knopf, 2013
- Finkielkraut, Alain, La Défaite de la pensée, Paris: Gallimard, 1987
- Goldsen, Rose, The Show and Tell Machine, New York: Delta, 1975
- Guattari, Félix, Chaosmosis, Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1992
- Kamenetz, Anya, Generation Debt, London: Penguin, 2006
- Kassir, Samir, Considerations sur le malheur arabe, Paris: Actes Sud Sindbad, 2004
- Kennard, Matt, 'How The "War on Terror" Came Home', Guardian, 17 September 2013
- Khalaji, Mehdi, Apocalyptic Politics: On the Rationality of Iranian Policy, Washington, DC: Washington Institute for Near East Policy, 2008
- Kroker, Arthur, Spasm: Virtual Reality, Android Music, and Electric Flesh, Montreal: New World Perspectives, 1993
- Kundera, Milan, The Book of Laughter and Forgetting, London: Knopf, 1980
- Lazzarato, Maurizio, La fabrique de l'homme endetté, Paris: Editions Amsterdam, 2011
- Lintner, Bertil, Great Leader, Dear Leader: Demystifying North Korea Under Kim Clan, Chang Mai, Thailand: Silkworm Books, 2005

- Lyotard, Jean François, La condition post-moderne, Paris: Minuit, 1979
- MacMillan, Margaret, Paris 1919: Six Months That Changed the World, New York: Random House, 2001
- Malaparte, Curzio, L'Europa vivente, 1925, nuova edizione, Il Corriere della sera, 2010
- Meghnagi, David, Dalla santa inquisizione al nazismo in Lettera internazionale, Numero 51-51 I Trimestre 1997, p. 35–36
- Mezvinisky, Norton and Israel Shalak, Jewish Fundamentalism in Israel, London: Pluto Press, 1999
- Mirandola, Giovanni Pico, On the Dignity of Man and Other Works, trans. Charles Glenn Wallis, Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill, 1965
- Pirenne, Henri, Mohammed and Charlemagne, trans. Bernard Mial, New York: Norton, 1939
- Minc, Simon and Alain Nora, L'informatization de la société, Paris: Éditions du seuil, 1978
- Ross, Andrew, 'NYU Professor: Are Student Loans Immoral?', Daily Beast, 27 September 2012
- Nietzsche, Friedrich, The Dawn of Day, trans. John McFarland Kennedy, New York: MacMillan Company, 1911
- Ross, Andrew, The Exorcist and the Machines: 100 Notes, 100 Thoughts: Documenta Series 044, Kassel, Germany: Hatje Cantz, 2012
- Rushdie, Salman, Fury, New York: Random House, 2001
- Serazio, Michael, Shooting for Fame: The (Anti-) Social Media of a YouTube Killer, Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 2009
- Shiva, Vandana, 'From Seeds of Suicide to Seeds of Hope: Why Are Indian Farmers Committing Suicide and

- How Can We Stop This Tragedy?', Huffington Post, 29 May 2009
- Stewart, Thomas, Intellectual Capital, New York: Doubleday, 1997
- Steyerl, Hito, The Wretched of the Screen, Berlin: Sternberg Press, 2012
- Suskind, Ron, 'Faith, Certainty and the Presidency of George W. Bush', New York Times Magazine, 17 October 2004
- Watzklawicz, Paul, John Weakland and Richard Fisch, Change: Principles of Problem Formation and Resolution, New York: Norton, 1974
- Wilentz, Amy, 'A Zombie Is a Slave Forever', New York Times, 30 October 2012.
- Wittgenstein, Ludwig, Tractatus Logico Philosophicus, Edinburgh: Edinburgh Press 1922
- World Health Organization, Prevention du suicide: L'état d'urgence mondial, 2014, http://apps.who.int/iris/bitstream/10665/131801/1/9789242564778\_fre.pdf?ua=1&ua=1
- Virginia Tech Review Panel, Mass Shootings at Virginia Tech: Report of the Review Panel, August 2007, washingtonpost.com
- Zielenziger, Michael, Shutting Out the Sun: How Japan Created Its Own Lost Generation, London: Random House, 2009

Filmography

3-Iron, directed by Kim Ki-duk, 2004
71 Fragments of a Chronology of Chance, directed by Michael Haneke, 1994
A Touch of Sin, directed by Jia Zhangke, 2013
Batman, directed by Tim Burton, 1989
Blade Runner, directed by Ridley Scott, 1982
Bowling for Columbine, Documentary, directed by Michael Moore, 2002
Elephant, directed by Gus Van Sant 2003
Hunger Games, directed by Gary Ross, 2012, 2013
Oldboy, directed by Park Chan-Wook, 2003
Still Life, directed directed by Jia Zhangke, 2006
Take Shelter, directed by Jeff Nichols, 2008
The Dark Knight Rises, directed by Christopher Nolan, 2012
The Purge, directed by James DeMonaco, 2013
The Serpent's Egg, directed by Ingmar Bergman, 1977
Time, directed by Kim Ki-duk, 2006
The Truman Show, directed by Peter Weir, 1988