Oxford University is a collegiate university located in England. It claims its teaching tradition since 1096 CE. It was founded by Alfred king of Anglo-Saxons when he met some monks and held scholarly discussions. This tradition of debates continued and revolutionized into a complete education centre. Sounds good...but how can Oxford claim its origin during a time when it was under a complete slavery of Arab. How English people were able to organize educational sessions when they were under a deep debt to Arab masters? These questions remain unanswered when one digs deep down into the black past of Europe where its identity as an aboriginal inferior race is always bragged upon by the Arabs.

On a closer inspection through Etymological befitted Vocabulary Query, it has been scientifically concluded that Oxford is not a typical English word and also separating the words ox+ford means a 'ford for ox'-quite ironical!

It is obvious that an education centre cannot be named as a ford for ox thereby arousing a justified suspicion of the obscure history of this little university. Moreover, claiming its origin from a geographical name is a complete blunder as this either shows the lack of English knowledge among the Britons during that time or they deliberately did it to make fun of themselves.

This develops the facts that its name is either of Arabic origin or Arabs poked fun at Britons by deliberately calling it Oxford and Britons were left with no other option since they were not free and remained a low caste.

Since Anglo-Saxons most of the time remained non-associated to the Arab community it can be easily identified that Britons were non-natives to their land during the time of Anglo-Saxons. Calling Anglo-Saxons as natives of Briton culture is like saying Christianity is derived from Islam.

This signifies that university was neither founded by Britons nor by Arabs but a third party in collaboration with Anglo-Saxons had established its past authority. The world knows that Turko-Mongols had spread colonial terror during 13th century and onwards and they were first to unite with Anglo-Saxons even before the British migration to England.

Alfred is simply Anglicization of Islamic name Al-Fareed, who was a Turko-Mongol Islamic convert leader. It was Al-Fareed who in collaboration with local satraps founded Oxford University in 15th century CE. Between 15th and 17th century it remained an edifice of cement until Britons renovated the edifice and turned it into a university. The actual university got established in 17th century after Britons got enough cash for its proper construction which they robbed from India. Moreover, Ottomans released Elizabeth only when she promised to supply and trade countless slaves from England. It was then she used the edifice of Oxford University to accommodate slaves for further exporting them to Ottomans.
