It is no coincidence that some of the most profitable sites on the planet make money by sharing content. Sharing hot & trending topics brings viral traffic to your site.

Have you ever wondered how the top companies always have appealing & professional images into their posts & corporate documents? Not just that, the success lies in consistency. They're able to churn out fresh content & beautiful designs with relative ease.

There're bigger companies who have their own in-house design team. But traditionally, this's the process that's followed for content creation.

1. Identify 2-3 freelance websites
2. Get the design requirements with all the relevant details
3. Check out the designer's portfolio & identifying the ones which suit one's taste.
4. Get the best pricing (on an average it takes around $200)
5. Award the contract & wait for the first draft

Here's where it gets tricky. Because looking at the draft kicks in a level of disappointment as the designs wouldn't be the way it was envisaged

6. Accommodate the design after a series of iterations & settle for a one that's close to what was expected.

So far, the only other alternative to getting the designs is either you learn the technical get yourself acquainted with design softwares -which are very technical & needs a very steep learning curve to get faster results.

Or outsource it.

But as mentioned above the outsourcing process has its set of disadvantages that can't be always controlled.

Also, did I mention about the different image size restrictions that every of the social media websites have? Things are only going to get complicated.

That's why a new tool- Carvly.
