Echocardiography fellowship personal statement

I have been familiar with echocardiography early on in my life because my older sister was born with a medical condition called heart murmur. I didn't know what it was until one day, when she was 15 and I was 12, we were playing in our yard, running around, and suddenly she passed out. Everybody was so stressed out, and I remember the feeling of anger at that time, wondering why it had to be my sister who had to go through all of that.

It was at that point that I became really interested in pursuing a career in the medical field. I thought that if I become a doctor, specializing in the field, it would be possible for me to care for my sister. Even though I was not allowed to go with her during check-ups, I would always tinker on the results of the doctor's analysis.

I have been working as a cardiologist ever since. Later on, my focus shifted on a more specific field – echocardiography. My experience in cardiology has helped me with this field. I have devoted my time and effort to learning further about this subject. I became an intern at the local hospital for my undergraduate career. There I was able to observe doctors performing echocardiography. I also had the chance to learn some of the techniques myself.

I believe that much about the heart remains unknown. As I was serving at the hospital, a doctor explained to me that being a doctor means that you only know that something will work about just 1% of the time. The heart is a very important organ in the body that it plays a very important role. A doctor in my field cannot afford any mistakes. A fellowship in echocardiography will provide my knowledge that I will need for my career goals.

We were all very excited when my eldest brother finally got married. Everybody was so close in the family that we take good care of everybody all the time. We became even happier when my sister-in-law called us one day screaming, informing us that she is pregnant. Everybody went wild in preparing for the baby's arrival, since the little angel will be the first one in our family.

Imagine my family's shock when we were informed about a month after my sister-in-law is due that the baby is suffering from congenital heart disease. There we entered the denial stage, blaming who we felt needed to be blamed for the condition. I was already in my second year in medical school back then.

At school, I learned that these things do not just happen right away. However, I also believe that there are things that we cannot control. So, rather than bickering and getting depressed, the entire family has supported each other. Now, our little bundle of joy is already in her toddler years, happily surrounded by people who loved her.

For myself, I took that opportunity in selecting my field of specialty. I recognized the need to start with prevention when it comes to heart problems. I believe that these medical conditions can be prevented, which is why I focused on studying preventive cardiology. I have worked as an intern for three years at a local hospital, but I am now more interested in learning further about specific techniques that can help me all throughout my career.

My hands on experience with my niece have helped me a lot in connecting with my patients. That experience, along with my desire to help will certainly allow me to become successful in this fellowship program. I am looking forward to participating in it.

Interventional cardiology fellowship personal statement

I have always been fascinated with the human heart. It is the main muscle which works in sustaining life, requiring the coordination of each muscle fiber that composes it. When this particular type of perfection is needed, several aberrations can be expected. The particular study of all these abnormalities and the treatment solutions involved was what inspired me to become a surgeon in the field of cardiology.

I believe that this interventional cardiology fellowship will offer me the chance to heighten my understanding even further in the field of heart surgery. The diagnoses and providing treatment to various heart diseases have clearly become my focus when I was still going through my n undergraduate and medical studies. I have taken a lot of electives in the field as I was very interested in learning more.

On top of that, I have also worked as an intern at rehabilitation clinics and hospitals where I had the chance to observe surgeries and transplants. I am very familiar with sonogram and electrocardiogram as tools for diagnosis, and hope to improve on my familiarity of all the other techniques that are used in isolating potential anomalies in the performance of the heart.

I also believe that with great power comes great responsibility. The job of a doctor is tough, being entrusted with the life and entire well-being of a person. Therefore, I firmly believe that it is my obligation to make the best and well researched decisions particularly in life threatening situations. This needs a wide knowledge regarding various heart conditions, including the familiarity with research and diagnostic tools. I am very excited in learning more about catheter based treatments which is studied in interventional cardiology. I believe that with the help of this fellowship program, I will be able to perform even better.

When I was in medical school, my plan was to pursue specialization in the field of obstetrics and gynecology. After all, my mother was also in the same field, and she is running her own clinic. It would be very easy for me to work with her, and learn from her while I am also continuing with my education.

However, when I was in my third year in medical school, one of my closest friends in class became pregnant. During her second trimester, her baby was diagnosed with congenital heart defect. I can observe the stress that the entire family had to experience, particularly since she was carrying her first baby. She was forced to stop schooling, and when she gave birth, she took care of her baby personally. During my personal visits in their home, I realize the need for a well qualified physician to take care of situations such as that.

It was then that I realized that my passion is in helping parents as well as children who are facing cardio related problems. I switched my attention to the field of pediatric cardiology. I have already served as a senior intern at a local hospital, where I had the chance to interact with patients. What makes dealing with children amazing is that even though they may be going through a difficult stage in their lives, it is clear in their faces that they have hope. That also helped me to feel motivated to learn even further.

I am looking for a fellowship program which will allow me to explore further in this field. I believe that my experience as well as my passion and drive will help me through the entire program. I believe that your program offers the best options available and I am looking forward to becoming part of it.

Heart failure fellowship personal statement

When I was in my early years in medical school, my mother suffered from a myocardial infarction. I remember that every member in our family felt the need to be cared for by a physician. With my exposure to the medical field, I realize that understanding the root cause of coronary disease is very important. My mother's ailment had a big effect in motivating me to complete training in heart failure medicine.

One day, I was walking out of an older woman's room as part of my rotation in the hospital's Coronary Care Unit. I overheard the woman telling her husband that I was the best doctor who had handled her during their stay. The following day, I went back to check and admitted to the couple that I have heard the compliment and personally asked why she felt so. She said that she was deeply impressed at how I really took the time to talk with her.

My concept of an ideal heart failure medical care has always rooted around a very strong understanding on the need for prevention. As a loving son, I have always found myself trying to convince my father, who has a family history of coronary disease, to finally quit smoking. Throughout the entire ordeal of getting him to stop, I have observed him struggling with physiological and social challenges which made it very difficult for him to quit. This experience helped me empathize with all of my patients.

In the future, I would love to be more involved in patient care for heart failure in a setting where I can perform clinical research that are outcomes based. The expressed satisfaction from all cardiologists I have met have fueled my conviction in sticking to the career of providing solutions to patients who have heart failure.
