

MMO Roundup: SWTOR has 1.7 million Players

Sometimes, you might want to know that there are other MMOs. It's not just WoW all the time. Massively our sister site, provides all the information you require about other MMOs - the past, present and the future.

Star Wars: The Old Republic currently has 1.7 million active players. EA reported that The Old Republic sold more than 2 million units and around 1.7million players. The publisher has reported better sales than expected for the December quarter, mostly due to the record-breaking sales of the brand new MMO title.

EverQuest II becomes free-to-play The speculation became a reality last week. Extrememining.net EverQuest will be available for free in March, which is the month in which the game was first released in 1999.

Dutch Supreme Court declares RuneScape theft a real-world crime stealing a virtual good deserving of a real-world sentence for criminality? According to a recent ruling by the Dutch Supreme Court, the answer is "yes." The court recently affirmed a verdict of an investigation into a case where teens attacked another youth and forced him to use a knife to give up his possessions from RuneScape which included an amulet that is available in game and a knife.

Do you want to be Massively's next Guild Wars columnist Are you a passionate Guild Wars enthusiast? Are you a passionate Guild Wars fan? Are you more excited about Guild Wars 2 than Mists of Pandaria Are you able to meet deadlines and follow directions? Then go to Massively!

Massively's week-in-review Don't let WoW Insider do all of the talking regarding Massively's most popular content of the week. Massively staff have compiled their weekly roundup of the best content on their site.