CHRIS HUTCHINS WITH THE STORIES THEY'LL ALL BE TALKING ABOUT

EDDIE'S GLASS ACT...

THERE could be trouble ahead for the royal who cannot abide drunks.

Prince Edward has landed a job working with Oliver Reed and John Hurt, who have been known to drink princes for breakfast.

As one who has experienced the rough side of Edward's tongue - he once gave me a lecture for being rude to him at a champagne party - I am well familiar with his views on temperance.

How this will sit with Reed and Hurt is anyone's guess.

The three are to work together on Edward's very first film, Isle Of Mann, in which Reed and Hurt will have ample opportunity to imbibe - it describes life on the road in the Sixties with a debauched rock band.

Reed once said his only regret was that he hadn't drunk every pub dry. Hurt is equally well-known for his binges.

How suite! Trump's Brit of all right

PARTY GIRL: Anouska

JUST weeks after ditching his second wife, America's best-known billionaire Donald Trump has fallen under the spell of a 20-year-old English girl.

Trump, 50, who has failed in his bid to secure the services of Princess Diana's butler Paul Burrell, was in search of another British trophy when he met London model Anouska De Georgiou at a party in Manhattan.

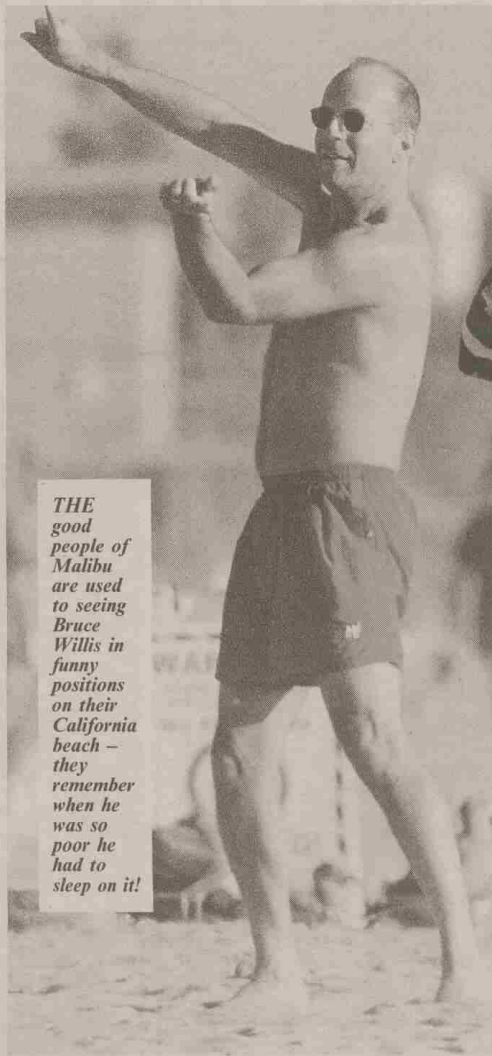

Several American millionaires already had their eyes on Anouska. But she was there with Robert Maxwell's daughter Ghislaine, who has introduced several of her attractive friends to the property developer.

And none of his would-be rivals owned a vast mansion in Florida like Donald does: Mar-a-Lago (where I have dined with him and his outgoing wife Marla) is enough to make any young girl go weak at the knees.

After their meeting, Trump flew Madam Maxwell and the model south to the sunshine state, where all three enjoyed a happy weekend together. When they returned to New York, Anouska was installed in one of Donald's many apartments there.

Ms De Georgiou likes older men - she went out once or twice with Joanna Lumley's ex-husband Jeremy Lloyd, who is 45 years her senior.

Doubtless it is the start of a long (by Trump standards it already is) friendship.

THE good people of Malibu are used to seeing Bruce Willis in funny positions on their California beach - they remember when he was so poor he had to sleep on it!

SECRETS

FOLLOWING their Barcelona debacle, the Spice Girls sent word to their sacked manager, Simon Fuller, proposing a kiss-and-make-up meeting. But no one can be sure that Fuller - a Peter Mandelson look-alike - got the message. In any event, the man behind Girl Power seems happy with his promised £15 million pay-off. The only thing the feisty five have over him is Emma's knowledge of whether he dyes his hair. Barnet police are investigating.

SO did Princess Diana toy with the idea of co-starring in Kevin Costner's sequel to his excellent movie The Bodyguard? Kensington Palace says the Princess had no intention of doing any such thing, but people posing as buildings rarely tell the truth. If he ever gets round to talking about her frequent phone calls to him, Tom Hanks could give us a measure of Diana's admiration for all things Hollywood.

STRUGGLING to stay around until his 82nd birthday on December 12, Frank Sinatra has been visited by the greatest love of his life, his ex-wife Nancy (with the laughing eyes). Confident that Nancy is not after his money, his current wife Barbara has invited her to co-host the ailing star's birthday celebrations. According to Nancy he listens a lot to his own recording of My Way and when it reaches the line "And now the end is near", he raises his glass (of Jack Daniels) and murmurs: "I'm ready".

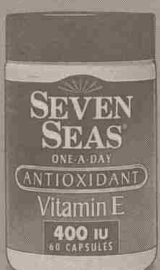

WHICH father was the only parent who had a paid flunky to hold an umbrella over his head when he took his son to enlist at Millfield, Britain's most expensive school? Step forward Britain's most ordinary millionaire, motor racing ace Nigel Mansell.

CLEAN and sober these past two years, wild rocker Courtney Love has made a TV commercial for the Musicians Against Drugs rehabilitation programme - the very people who criticised her, as a recovering addict, for accepting the role of the porn tycoon's drug-ridden wife in the movie The People v Larry Flynt.

IN the bleakest week of his life (so far) Gary Glitter had one reason for light relief. He was reported to be 53 or 54. Paul Gadd, the man inside the glitter suit, is in fact approaching his 60th birthday.

LAURIE McMenemy says that before one international match at Wembley, the UEFA observer - a no-nonsense German by the name of Herr Braun - insisted on meeting Paul Gascoigne and the rest of the England team. As Herr Braun turned to leave after a very formal few minutes with the respectful players, Gazza called after him: "And give my regards to Eva."

HOOKER, LINE AND STINKER

WITH a touching sense of irony, Kelly McGillis has been cast in Painted Angels, a movie about women who have fallen on hard times and turned to prostitution.

The actress (pictured right), who earned more than a million dollars a film starring in such blockbusters as Top Gun, gave it all up to look after her husband, Fred Tillman, and their two children. They opened a bar in Key West, Florida. Alas, her world fell apart when Tillman was arrested for soliciting a "prostitute" who turned out to be an undercover policewoman.

LONELY LESLIE SLINKS AWAY

A NIGHT out with Jeffrey Archer's son Bill should raise a few pounds in a London charity auction on Tuesday. But will anybody bid for a day in the company of Style Change presenter John Leslie?

Unlikely, judging by his performance at a party in aid of the Born Free Foundation the other night. The event raised £10,000 for endangered species, but girls who wanted to go out with Leslie (short-sighted Catherine Zeta Jones once did) appeared to be extinct. And Leslie was later seen disappearing into the night...alone.

LOCK YOUR DOORS, OJ'S ON THE WAY!

THE most feared words in the English language - "Hi there, I'm OJ Simpson and I'm your new neighbour" - will be uttered any day now in the Surrey stockbroker belt.

He may have been accused of murdering his wife, but nobody could accuse America's former sporting hero of having bad taste. OJ has been looking over a six-bedroom mansion at Burhill - near the Walton-on-Thames home of his publicist Max Clifford. Said to be poor after his legal fight, Simpson did not bat an eyelid when told the house would cost nearly £2 million. He said he loved its close proximity to several golf courses.

If he buys the house, OJ's door-locking neighbours will include Cliff Richard, Sue Barker and Mick Hucknall.
