

Cryptic Tweet From Minecraft Developer Hints For 1.18 Update Coming Soon

Mojang, a Minecraft developer announced in October the second part of their massive Caves and Cliffs update would be available in "a month or so". It looks like it's almost time, since Mikael "slicedlime" Hedberg, the technical lead for Minecraft Java Edition, just tweeted out something a little mysterious:

While it might not sound like much, Mojang employees are well-known for using Twitter to announce new features. The tweet's wording, specifically "preparing" suggests that there will be a second part to Caves and Cliffs.

Pre-releases usually occur a few days or weeks before the official release of the update and function as a step between "snapshots" - the testing ground for new features players can choose to use and the final update, which is as close to being completed as possible. 1.17's last update was released on May 27th. The full update was released on June 8th.

What is this implying? It means that we won't have long to wait for the 1.18 update that will add incredible new world generation to Minecraft worlds. It could even arrive before the end of November!

Mojang also revealed , in this year's Minecraft Live presentation, that the Deep Dark biome with its new mob The Warden would be moved back to The Wild update in 2022.

Are you prepared for the upgrade? Minecraft blog Have you tried the snapshots? Please let us know what you think in the comments!
