All along such trajectories of dead-end states, the agent still has to choose actions with the (false) hope of reaching a “life-gate” (blue). Importantly, once a dead-end state (yellow) is reached, it may take some random number of steps before reaching a “death gate” (red). It may take several attempts to learn how to use the pump correctly, but they are usually effective. 43% of American women over the age of 60 - long past menopause - are considered obese. Setting a lower threshold can help to raise flags earlier on, when the conditions are of high-risk, but it is still not too late. On the other hand, adjacent states to dead-ends are possibly the most critical to alert, as it might be the last chance to still do something to avoid failure (see Appendix A3 for more details).
