two cultures by drawing a line between the places where black people can and cannot be present. This separation reflects the discrimination of the black people in the dominant white world, and the experience of inequality.

In Fish Cheeks, the readers meet the representative of the Chinese culture. The protagonist lives with her parents, who also support and accept her. Nevertheless, the girl feels very isolated. She is not proud to be Chinese; on the contrary, she is ashamed of her culture. Her origin is a burden to her, as she is confident that Chinese are inferior to the white people. She even tries to imitate Americans for that reason. As a result, she feels lonely within her community. Amy Tan shows the separation further using the example of the relationship between the girl and her beloved person, "What would Robert think of our shabby Chinese Christmas? What would he think of our noisy Chinese relatives who lacked proper American manners? What terrible disappointment would he feel upon seeing not a roasted turkey and sweet potatoes but Chinese food?" (Tan 1) Though this Chinese girl falls in love with a white minister's son named Robert, she is sure that she has no chance with him, since she does not deserve him. While her parents are proud to be Chinese, she regrets of it. Her mother tells her, "... inside you must always be Chinese. You must be proud you are different. Your only shame is to have shame" (Tan 2). Their daughter cannot accept her origin, herself and her culture.

Amy Tan uses narration and description better to illustrate a sense of isolation from the dominant culture. She is more skilled in using the setting of time and place. Though both authors describe the events of the evening time to highlight the sense of isolation, Amy Tan uses place description more effectively than Maya Angelou does. The author of Champion of the World shows the black community gathered at the Uncle Willie's store (Bird 43). The store is quite small, but it does not reflect peculiarities of the African American culture. There could be many stores of a kind at that time. Though the author mentions that it was a special place for the black community, one gets no idea
