Introduction

What is The Fame Game? Five steps to fame: Great. Meet. Party. Fun. Women.

Assanova's Rising, I think we all remember it. The weird guy in the dorm. OK, so maybe I seemed a little weird due to an event that has yet to be written about, but what happened afterwards? What happened when I transferred from the regional campus to the Ohio State main campus, into a much bigger atmosphere?

When I arrived, I told myself what I now say to you, "no more". No more being shy. No more feeling sorry for yourself. And most important of all, no more being without an abundance of women. Yes, I was able to get women in the past, due to status, but I no longer had that same status in college. Status? That's the key word. Time to rebuild.

That? That's when I began laying the groundwork in what would become The Fame Game. I was going to systematically rebuild my social circle, bring my name back to fame. What exactly are the makings of The Fame Game?

It's the system I had used that not only brought me consistent sex with very little use of actual "game", but it allowed me to attract women with my name alone. Not only that, but people were actually bringing women to me.

Why was that? Fame, and fame alone. In essence, I molded myself into a rockstar, and along with it came the perks. One of those perks being a constant stream of women. So, how did I do it? And most importantly, how will YOU?

Answering those questions is what I seek to do in this guide. The answers are what makes this THE EASIEST, MOST CONSISTENT, WAY TO ATTRACT WOMEN. No other system matches it, no other system comes close, and after you become someone of true rockstar status, you will need no other system. Welcome to our introduction to fashion, fame, and game. Welcome to Rockstar Famous Presents: The Fame Game, our five star system to fame.

Recap:

*The Fame Game is broken down into five easy steps.

*Greet. Meet. Party. Fun. Women.

*Become someone of true rockstar status.

*The easiest, most consistent, way to attract women.

*Rockstars do not have to work to attract women, and neither should you!

Greet

Casually greeting potential entourage members and becoming familiar with one another.

---

It sounds like the easiest, but in actuality, this is the most challenging part of the guide. Why? Because a great entourage is full of cool and interesting people.

Unfortunately, most of the cool and interesting people have already formed groups and cliques of their own. And they have no excuse to hang around you, the guy that no one knows.

So, how do you get around this obstacle? You take the stragglers. You're not looking for the cool people, because they're already taken. Nor are you looking for the weirdoes that no one wants to be seen with. What you want to look for, are the normal people that simply didn't have time to become part of a clique for one or more reasons.

Every walk of life has these people, but I'll use college as the example. These are the categories of people that either are just now getting out of the military, didn't live on a college campus for their first year or two, started school late and feel too old to hang out with the freshmen, or were just really busy and didn't have much of a social life. In general you're targeting those that are of college age and haven't formed a clique, or those that went through college and have broken up with their old cliques.

They may not be cool yet, but they're normal. And if they're normal, then they have potential to be fun and cool. This requires that you take some kind of leadership role that will be explained in the next chapter, but for now, let's talk about how I went about creating the first members of my entourage.

If you've been keeping up on The Real Assanova blog, then you know that I spent a great deal of time in my dorm lobby on weekend nights. What was I doing? Talking to every single person that came through that entered and exited my dorm lobby at night, guy or girl. What this did, was get my name out there, made people really familiar with me.

I was doing two things. The first, since I was down there every weekend, is I caught eye of who did and didn't have many friends. I looked closely at those who didn't, screening for the normal ones that simply weren't part of a clique yet. And the second? I was letting them get really comfortable with me, so that when I invited them somewhere, I didn't come off as a complete stranger.

This doesn't have to just take place in a college dorm. It works anywhere. I've added people to my clique from smaller bars. These were those who would show up in ones or twos and didn't have time to get out much.

Sex Lips and The L from The Real Assanova blog were two of those characters, although I did end up getting romantic with Sex Lips after she jumped all over me. Before they met me, they had no kind of social life whatsoever. Sex Lips had a busy government position, and The L was in some kind of medical school.

Now, these aren't the only way to find normal people without a clique yet.

Dorms and small bars aren't your only source. You can find them in just about any organized group activity (such as social clubs). People usually join these groups in hope of making new friends, and I know that Misha and Zenfox have recruited from their local Hash Run social group.

The other source, when looking for women in particular, is online. If they're sitting at home, typing up an online dating profile, then chances are, they're lonely and looking for excitement. I've recruited from all of the above sources.

There are many other options, but in order to keep this guide at a reasonable length, I'll cover them in the future.

Most of you already know how to have a normal conversation with complete strangers, but if you're having trouble with this step, then I suggest taking one of our limited in-field Rockstar Sessions, where our certified Social Professionals will guide you every step of the way. For now, let's move on to the next chapter.

Recap:

*Greet people(guy or girl) in places you frequent often.

*These can be anywhere.

*Your dorm lobby, coffee shop, social group, park.

*Take note of the people you consistently see alone. Talk to them. A simple

“How are you?” works.

*Become familiar with them, while letting them become familiar with you.

*The more frequently you talk to each other, the more comfortable you’ll become with one another.

*Distinguish which ones seem normal; Avoid the weird ones.

*These are those that probably aren't in an established social circle.

*Could have been too busy for an established social circle or clique.

Meet

Propose a small gathering. Small get-together at a local bar, your place, or event. Your entourage begins here.

Now that you've selected a few normal people for your entourage, it's time to bring them together. This is where you need a little creativity, well, not actually. You simply need a minor event to unite all of them. This can be a small, casual party at your place, or a small gathering at a bar. Use your imagination and replace "bar" with your common interests. Since I was a college kid when I was developing this system, drinking was our common interest.

Assuming that you now have an idea in mind, it's time to exchange contact information and invite them to your event. If you've been patient, and let your target entourage member get familiar with you, then when you suggest hanging out, they should be all for it. This is when you exchange phone numbers and/or directions to your event.

In my case, it was a small party in my dorm room. My first party started out with five people that included myself. Three guys, and two girls. This is where you have to set the tone.

They will only have a good time, if you're having a good time. This is perhaps the most crucial step in becoming well respected and seen as the "go to" guy. Again, some of you may already know how to do this, but If you find yourself needing assistance, further information is available over at <http://www.rockstarfamous.com> .

If you're not trying to have fun, then they won't, and they probably won't show up to your future events. And remember, these people have no friends to really hang out with. You don't have to do a lot to impress them. In reality, they just want friends. They're perfectly fine if you're not the most awesome person in the world.

When I threw that party, although there was a small number of us, I made sure we had a blast. There were drinks being spilled, items being knocked over, and people puking. Again, I'm not going to cover the details, as they will be covered in the future. The point of this guide is to just cover the gist of it. In short, they had a really good time and continued to come over.

If you're making sure that they're having a good time every time they come out, then it's time to really make a name for yourself. Up next? The Big One. This is what will launch you into stardom, give you rockstar status.

Recap:

*If you followed the "Greet" step correctly, then your potential entourage member should be comfortable with you to meet up.

*They're bored and looking for friends.

*They have no reason to say "no".

- * Plan a small event at your place, bar, or whatever your common interests are.

- * Make sure they have a good time.

- * If you're a good host, they'll want to meet up more frequently.

- * Follow this step correctly, and you'll be ready to launch into rockstar status.

Party

Your major event in which your new friends will bring their friends now that they know you know how to have a good time. This will launch you into stardom.

You now have a small group of decent friends. Great. Now it's time to really go all out. Do this right, and you'll be launched into stardom, just as I was when I threw my first big party (not the previous small one). At the time, I still only had a small group of friends, and no experience throwing a party whatsoever. I had just moved out of the dorms into my apartment with one of my new friends.

That's when I started planning. I wanted to go all out. It was my biggest investment as a college kid. I did my research on what made a great college party, and went to work. I hyped it up, and told my small circle of friends to invite everyone that they knew.

Already proven myself as a good host and fun guy, and how much I was about to put into this party, my newly acquired friends had no problem inviting all of their friends. In turn, their friends invited their friends. I knew this thing was going to be big. I did everything right.

So what happened? The party was a blast. I made sure everyone was happy by making sure they were having a good time. This party had done so much for my name. Before this, I struggled to maintain a steady stream of sex without becoming involved in a serious relationship. Now? People wanted to come over all the time. I couldn't throw an outlandish party every weekend. So, how would I continue to impress them and perpetuate my name?

One thing that I want to point out, is that I wasn't actually benefiting on my name and getting that steady stream of sex just yet. During this entire time, I made sure I didn't make the mistake that so many pick-up artists make. I DIDN'T HIT ON THE WOMEN I MET. I simply showed them a good time, and left it at that. These women would later become part of my entourage, as a result.

But like I was asking myself, how would I maintain the momentum that I had created? By investing in my own party kit, of course.

Recap:

*If you followed the “Meet” step correctly, then your newly acquired friends will have no problem inviting their friends to your big event or party.

*Plan perfectly, do your research on what makes a big party good. If you need assistance with planning a party or huge event, the Rockstar Famous crew can help you. They all have successful track records with party development and promotion.

*DO NOT HIT ON THE WOMEN YOU MEET. Many “pick-up artists” make this mistake and get stuck having to work very hard to attract the occasional woman.

*Great party? Now you have a proven track record and everyone'll want to meet you.

*Your name is out there. Good. Now it's time to keep it out there.

Fun

The party kit. Unique items in your home that will give people a reason to continue to come see you.

The Party Kit? What is it? Really, it depends on the interests of your group. But for me, my group consisted of hardcore partiers. I already had a decent TV and stereo system, but I needed a party kit. What could I buy, or create, or combine, that was difficult to find all in one place elsewhere?

That's when I came up with a solution. My apartment could hold a lot of people, so what did I do with it? I turned my room into a chill loungey type area. In the kitchen, was a beerpong/flip-cup table. And in my living room? Plenty of seating and older videogame systems. For some unexplained reason, women loved Mario Kart 64, and the guys loved beating each others asses in Street Fighter 2 and Mortal Kombat 3.

But I needed more. What makes all of that better, especially in college? Alcohol, and lots of it. Not only did I invest in a small bar mixing kit, but I budgeted a small portion of my income on maintaining alcohol. It was cheap beer and liquor, but it was still alcohol, and I made sure I always had it.

Again, not everyone has to drink. It was just relative to my social group at the time. Alcohol can easily be replaced with coffee, tea, a hookah, or whatever it is that your social circle does.

This was crucial for pre and after-parties. As of right now, I'm about to move into Misha's, and we're about to invest in a couple of big ticket items. Most notably a pool table and hot tub. This(the party kit) is going to keep a constant supply of women coming over to your place. Why? Because there aren't very many guys out there who can offer the same thing because they're being cheap asses.

Use your head. You can continue to waste money on World of Warcraft and other items that don't matter to women. Or you can invest in something that attracts women and other cool guys. And it doesn't have to be something as expensive as a pool table or hot tub. Remember, I did this on a budget while in college. The only difference now, is that I'm able to afford nicer items.

At this point, word of mouth is going to work in your favor. Your once small entourage is now bigger, and they're going to start spreading the word about how cool you and your place are.

This is when I started to have women, and guys, bring other women to me. they'd say things like "I want you to meet my friend, Omari. He's so cool.", or I'd run into someone and they'd say "You're Omari, right? Such and such has told me so much about you!".

Now it was time to start benefiting. This is when women started to throw themselves at me. I was cool. My place was cool. And everyone loved me. This is when I started to sleep with women due to the status of my name alone. They wouldn't stop attacking me.

There's one instance where Hollywood and Vanilla busted in on me with a video camera, so maybe that video will pop up sometime in the future on the Rockstar Famous website. And there's another instance where I thought it would be funny to invite a bunch of women over. There had to be at least fifteen girls, and no guys. They actually had to make me call guys and invite some over. There are several witnesses to this event. That's not what's important. What's important, is that YOU CAN DO THE SAME.

There are several earlier stories on The Real Assanova blog about some of these events. Just do a search for Blue Eyes, Green Eyes (I think her story is up), Vegas, Flojo, and I don't think I put most of the other stories up, as they took place before the blog.

What now? It's time to take your entourage and hit the road. By now, you should be the center of your newly formed entourage, and as a cool guy, you should be getting invited everywhere. This is when you're really going to start to reap the benefits.

Recap:

*Invest in a party kit.

*A party kit is unique items, or a combination of items that are difficult to find elsewhere.

*A party kit gives people a reason to come see you. It will continue to perpetuate your name, creating a snowball effect of your status. The more people who come over and see how cool your place is, the more people will hear about you and want to come over.

*Your name will become so well-known that women will start throwing themselves at you, requiring very little use of game.

*Design your party kit around attracting women and sometimes cool guys who will bring you women.

*World of Warcraft is not one of those items.

*This step can take place before or after the "Fun" and "Women" steps.

*If you're at a bar talking to women, the party kit gives women a legit excuse to leave with you. I've used it over, and over, and over again.

Women

They'll come pouring in, but how do you select which ones to sleep with? Yes, <----that is my infamous five star Wal-Mart branded bed comforter.

If you've been paying attention, then you know that YOU DO NOT HIT ON THE WOMEN IN YOUR ENTOURAGE! Every pick-up artist makes this mistake, and as a result, the girl leaves immediately, or he sleeps with the girl, complicates everything, and she eventually leaves when she finds out that he doesn't want a relationship.

In most cases, she takes a huge portion of her friends with her. And you also lose some of the benefits. To give you an example, one of the first four people in my entourage happened to be a really nice OSU hockey player. She had a HUGE social circle, but she was always busy and unable to go out with them. She happened to live close-by, so we talked every now and then.

One day, after she was familiar with us, we invited her over for a very small party (five people). She had a blast, and as a result? Not only did she take me to sorority events, but she brought many of her friends to my house for my larger parties.

What happened? I was able to network with a plethora of her friends. And she made it easy for me by telling them how cool I was. As a result, I extended my social network drastically. She has to be responsible for at least half of my lays in college, whether directly or indirectly, and she doesn't even know it.

Had I hit on her right away, I never would have seen her again if I had failed to win her over. Or, in another scenario, had I slept with her in the future, she may have grown pissed off with me when she found out that I didn't want a relationship. In turn, she could have cut me out of a lot of her social events and network of friends.

This is why I'm strictly against hitting on or sleeping with my inner circle of females. They'll constantly bring new women and connections to me. The same goes for the cool guys. They'll do all of my talking for me, and bring new cool guys or women to me. So, I avoid pissing them off when possible.

Who do you sleep with? You sleep with the women they bring to you. Even if you piss those women off, you'll still be cool with your inner circle, because you aren't doing anything to them directly. At the very worst, that woman that they brought to you won't come over anymore, but your inner circle will continue to hang around and bring new women to you.

And since you're the center of your social circle, the people they bring to you will think that you're cool, especially when your inner circle is telling them how cool you are. It further validates your coolness when you have the right party kit, and are able to throw a small party within an instant's notice.

The above is how I was able to sleep with women without having to use any kind of real game. Visitors to my place would see how cool I was, and women would attack me, dragging me to my bedroom, or purposely asking to sleep in my bed with me. Why? Because women want to have sex with the cool guy.

It's no different than a woman wanting to sleep with a rockstar, even though she knows nothing about him.

This same principle applies when you hit the road with your entourage. The story with Delilah is a perfect example of this. When I brought my entourage to some of the bars I frequented, the woman I was casually talking to would notice how many people knew me, assume I was this really cool guy, and they'd be all over me.

A high value person in your social circle has the same effect. When I go to a bar, casually talk to a girl, and she sees me talking to the owner of a bar, or a bouncer who hits me with V.I.P. (this was the case with the Italian), she immediately places me in the rockstar category, and is all over me because I've displayed just how cool I really am.

As a result, she easily comes home with me (remember, the Italian actually invited me back to her place), and she starts hitting on and gaming me. In essence, I have reversed the game by becoming the prize. A lot of gurus talk about becoming the prize, but how many have actually laid it out so that the average guy can understand it?

What Rockstar Famous has created, is a CONCRETE system for those who are tired of theory, after theory, after theory that only works for a very small percentage of the men out there. The Fame Game is by far, the EASIEST WAY TO ATTRACT WOMEN.

You can sit there in front of your computer, reading about the latest routine that other gurus have added to method's that simply don't work for the majority of men out there (keyword: majority), or you can take the path that so many of the cooler people that you aspire to become have. People like the cool fraternity guy, the cool artist, or the cool bar guy. None of them have to work hard to attract women. Why? Because they have rockstar status, and you can achieve the same status! Rockstar Famous: Fashion. Fame. Game.

Recap:

*Two things about Delilah in her story (available over at The Real Assanova).

One, she was a busy girl. And two, at one point, she mentioned how everyone seemed to know me. Due to my status, she ate up just about everything I threw at her. She didn't care what I said to her. My status did the work for me, and you can build yours up to do the same!

*DO NOT HIT ON WOMEN IN YOUR INNER CIRCLE!! (aka your entourage)

*You should have a HUGE entourage with you by now. It gets you noticed.

*Being the cool guy, you'll get invited everywhere.

*Being the cool guy and having an entourage will get you special perks at bars.

*Noticing that you're a big deal, people will want to be associated with you, thus bringing women to you.

*Women notice when you're a well-known guy (aka rockstar status), and pay attention to you.

*Women chase men of high status!

*Although this guide has a ton of useful information, it only covers the tip of the iceberg. What are the specifics? How do you promote your party? How do you get free bottle service at a bar? How do you get free V.I.P? How do you dress like a rockstar? How do you separate good game from the majority of useless game out there?

*Oh, and remember those that were too cool to hang around you in the past? All of a sudden, you're the star now, and they're gravitating to you.

*We couldn't possibly cover everything we wanted to in this guide, due to time restraints. It is 3:30 AM, the day the guide is due, and as I write this, I still have yet to insert pictures. However, all of your answers(and more) await over at <http://www.rockstarfamous.com> !

Afterword by Zenfox

Zenfox, another Social Professional who has successfully attracted women due to his status, read a pre-release version of The Fame Game.

---

“Omari,

The guide looks awesome! I like everything in it!

I know you touched on this, but especially for some people who are out of college and have no cool people at their job, I think finding a social group, such as the Hash, or a meet-up group, or a sports league or whatever is a great way to meet people you have a common interest to.

Whenever I join any group like this, I know that in one year, I will be a leader of the group. Obviously, it follows the same steps, but I think it would be good to mention.

I also found it interesting how what you did in the dorm is basically the same thing I did in East St. and later, Ana Moly's. I think if you are not in college or a dorm, you can find someplace that serves a similar function, such as a neighborhood bar or restaurant where people go regularly.

When I moved to German Village, I knew literally no one and had no friend's. I walked into Easy St. my first night and announced to everyone that my name is Mark, and this is now my bar. I hung out in Easy St. every fucking day until it seemed like everyone in the neighborhood knew who I was.

That's how I brought Jamie James into my social circle and she introduced me to lots of promoters, DJ's, and bar owners/managers. People ask me all the time when I'm going to try to fuck Jamie, but like you said, I've always knew that would be a big mistake, whether I succeeded or not.

Sure, I'll flirt with her sometimes, but I've never made a serious effort to game her and have told other guys (some of my friends) to stay off of her as well. We might want to mention something about this to make it clear that you don't have to be in a dorm. You can use the same principles anywhere the same people gather regularly.

When I was thinking social game, I was going to suggest people find a coffee shop or a bar and grill in a cool area close to where they live, and hang out there until they start to meet people and build a social circle."

This is coming from a guy who has successfully rebuilt his social circle, and reaped the benefits of such. I won't go into details, but he lived a lavish life due to his connections and status. And when I say lavish, I'm talking about sleeping with strippers and porn stars, not because of his game, but because of his social status!

So what happened? He had a kid, and wanting to do the best for his son, he gave up his lavish lifestyle to focus on being a father. And then, he woke up one day, realized he was fat, old, and didn't have much of a social circle left. The life of dating strippers and hanging out with other high status males was over.

That's when he moved to German Village, and decided to rebuild his social circle using the same principles discussed in this guide. What does this prove? It proves that any guy, anywhere, can follow these same steps, and REAP THE SAME REWARDS, AND HAVE ATTRACTIVE WOMEN CHASE AFTER YOU!

And speaking of strippers and porn stars, Misha has also slept with a porn star due to his Rockstar Status. Some of you may have heard of <http://www.littleapril.com> (NOT SAFE FOR WORK!). The main star of this website is the woman I speak of, and you can view a photo of the two together on our main website, over at <http://www.rockstarfamous.com>

About The Author

Here's what others have to say about the author:

"Dominance. That's the biggest thing I've picked up.

That you gotta improve yourself, follow your passion, and get good at it. Present it to women who'll appreciate it and they'll flock to you.

Another simple yet overlooked thing I like is you make real connections with girls. No real connection, no go.

Don't ask to do anything. I noticed you never push for sex. You go at her pace and if she gives you that hard to get bullshit you back off until she comes after you again. Macktastic.

Not wasting time on 'maybe chicks'. I like that. It's really desperate and now I understand that.

The importance of looking your best. You're a great example that dressing well and uniquely can make things easier.

Also you don't hold back. You're upfront about what you expect and you speak your mind and do what you want. Thanks for helping me bring more of that out in myself. That's how I've always wanted to communicate with women.

You need to keep writing. Your simple straight to the point funny way of explaining things along with tons of examples is VERY unique. The seduction industry is completely saturated with garbage all saying the same thing with different lingo. I picked up the new book and I think you could make some serious money writing ebooks like that.

It's simple and it works. You even explained something like state matching and leading in such a way a high school freshmen could read it and go do it today. I'm really impressed. It's a great reminder of how simple it really is if you have your shit together.

Keep this up and you'll put some 'gurus' out of business."

-Emeka O

“Once upon a time I was a really nice guy. Girls were not to be touched and needed to be protected from the assholes who would take advantage of their insecurity. But after years of trying to raise a girls' self esteem as a way to get her I realized that was similar to bullrushing a wall headfirst multiple times.

My cousin saw that I wanted to succeed with women so he gave me some stuff to read. I burned through this 500 page tome of information and it helped a great deal, with still no success. I then read quite a bit more.

Through this time my views had changed, but my actions had not. I would think in one way and behave in a different way. At this point I actually TRIED to be more of an asshole. I had put a conscious effort into being an asshole to no avail; girls said to me "you try to be a jerk but you're really a very nice guy". FUCK!!! All my hard work, for nothing!

Then I found asshole literature. Stuff written by Tucker Max and Omari. After trying for one and a half years to improve myself, I found my way. Reading this stuff has made me improve faster than I ever have. Seeing them as examples on how to behave like YOURSELF, I'm more sure of my actions and don't make apologies for things that I do.

Girls are actually looking at me now, one's that I don't know at all. Like in the mall, on the bus, at school, across the street, at my first kegger(I'm 18 btw), at my older sisters(21) parties, in HMV, at a Halo 2 Tournament I directed(haha, her bf was right there too); anywhere there's girls, I get looks. I didn't get a lot of muscle or change my cloths or hair that much so it couldn't be that. My sister attributes my new success to "maybe you're becoming an asshole, that's what always happens"."

-Tyson C

"I have read most of the stuff available, techniques, styles, patterns and a whole lot more. While all of that stuff helped me move from being a shy guy to being a more relaxed person, the stuff Omari writes put my game on a completely different level. I have moved away from relying on routines to saying exactly what is on my mind and getting what I want. I haven't gotten his new book on one night stands, but if I hear its as funny and insightful as his other writing then its only a matter of time before I get this too. I wouldn't recommend Omari's stuff for the faint of heart, because his honesty is harsh, but for me and anyone who isn't afraid to put themselves out there his insights are invaluable."

-David Y

"1) One thing that comes to mind is I think you misattribute what causes your success. I think it's less opening direct or being sincere or whatever, and more that you're a funny asshole, which is pretty much synonymous with good attraction game. My favorite reports from you you mention a few things you say to the girl early on and I often laugh out loud while reading them.

2) Another thing that strikes me is that you seem to do a lot of takeaways. Sometimes I read the reports and I think "woah, why'd he leave that girl, it looks like she was into him" I guess that's one of those things that separates the good, the willingness to walk away really hooks them, and your reports definitely demonstrate that.

3) You do seem to game like most naturals, no routines, early C/F, and emphasis on ONSs over phone game. That's definitely cool, and a style of game I respect and plan to eventually get to.

4) Another thing is that you don't seem to do group theory much, which I would say is overrated in some cases, especially if you hook the target quick. I'm curious whether that's an accurate observation, and also whether you open mixed sets at all?

5) People say ONS is all logistics, but I can see that to a large extent, how much the girl is into you is far more important. You seem to pull in a lot of situations where the girl pretty much decides that she wants you and wants to get with you that night, regardless of the circumstances.

Anyway, I enjoy reading your blog, there's some insightful stuff there, and you clearly know what you're doing."

"I learned that you shouldn't make a problem where there is none. I also learned that other people will always try to drag you down ( sometimes intentionally, sometimes subconsciously) if you try to fly above the race, by simply being real.

Furthermore I learned that people should like you for who you really are and not for how you make them feel. You should always put your own unique personality out there in the best light possible and welcome the people that accept it and cut the people that don't accept it out of your life.

Another thing I learned from your blog (and from personal experience) is to stay away from routines."

"Reach in between your legs, and scratch. Some of you might be wondering, "scratch what?" That's the point. If your testicles aren't the size of small planets, you've more then likely missed out on much of the opportunities life has thrown you. Technically, you're a woman in a mans body. That is to say- You're weak.

Nobody respects a man who can't be a man, just as you can't respect yourself. You either bitch and whine that "I can't do it, it's too hard" or you take your lumps, and get one step closer to that man you want to be.

Omari has a good understanding of this path that, sadly, too few men decide to take. There is a reality and a sincerity to his story that most "PUA's" lack. This guy is going places, it's simply a matter of who wants to come along for the ride."

"You know what? I don't know if it was a result of reading your ebook or what, but last night I pulled my first one night stand. I guess I just wanted to let you know that it worked. Your stuff works bro. Keep up the good writing."
