

Agricultural Transformation and Rural Development

The purpose of this paper is to find out the deteriorating performance of agriculture in developing countries and to find out how to develop rural areas, supporting policies, and the integration between supporting objectives as well as to find out solutions that must be taken by developing countries to create agricultural and rural areas as one of the ways in which agricultural and rural areas can be developed. reliable sector.

From the various things that have been discussed in the previous matters, it is undeniable that the agricultural and rural sectors can also help improve the national economy. Various contributions that can be made include (1) Increasing Employment so that it will automatically reduce the level of employment unemployment (2) To suppress the high rate of urbanization in the country, and (3) To balance the growth of the industrial sector. One thing that is very appropriate if you want to improve the existing economic order in countries that have large agricultural areas is to build these areas which will certainly participate in improving the structure of the economic order in the country concerned.

With the construction of a good agricultural sector, this will also have a good impact on rural areas because the agricultural sector is a sector that is very influential for rural areas in terms of obtaining real rural income.

If the agricultural sector in the village can continue to progress and develop, the real rural income will also certainly increase. If the real income increases, the village can carry out the development of the village in question, such as the construction of roads and other infrastructure that can advance the village. Thus, if the transformation of agriculture and the rural environment can be carried out properly, then the national economy of the country concerned will definitely run in a better direction where the distribution of income in the country concerned can be implemented.

The lack of agricultural produce makes farmers complain, especially for farmers in remote villages. In addition, the selling price decreased due to import activities carried out by the Indonesian government. This resulted in suffering for farmers in remote villages. This import activity carried out by the government is due to the lack of food from local farmers. For farmers, here are some efforts to increase agricultural yields in remote villages

Planting the Right Plants

Currently, most farmers in Indonesia are often forced to plant types of crops in rice fields. This is usually done by farmers when they see other farmers are able to benefit from the types of plants planted. Many farmers always follow the trend and ignore the land they own.

Please note that land is the main place for certain types of plants. Therefore, not all plants are suitable to be planted on the land. if forced to be planted on the land, surely the results will not be maximal. So it is better to plant plants that are suitable for the land you have.

To be able to find out what types of plants are suitable for planting in the land, it is necessary to be careful from the farmers themselves. In addition, the agricultural extension team also needs to intervene in this matter. The extension team will later provide counseling on what types of plants are suitable for planting and facilitate farmers with superior seeds.

Cultivating and Fertilizing the Land Correctly

The key to success for farmers to get abundant harvests is superior seeds. In addition, land management and maintenance are also very important to pay attention to. Please note that land management must be carried out optimally and regularly, starting from hoeing, plowing and much more.

If the land has been loosened, then the farmers must also try to make the land fertile again. The way to make the land fertile again is to provide manure or you can also provide other fertilizers that are suitable for the land.

To get abundant harvests, farmers are required to be painstaking in the care and processing of land. This is an effort to increase agricultural output in remote villages that must be done.

Good Water Arrangement
