Symposium on ROLE OF PHARMACIST IN PHARMACOVIGILANCE

March 14, 2020

Organized by:

Department of Pharmaceutical Chemistry, SPER, JH and IPA (Delhi State Branch)

Introduction to the symposium

Medicines help us treat many diseases but Adverse Drug Reactions (ADRs) cause serious health problems. Studies indicate that ADRs account for approximately 5% of all acute hospitalizations. About half of these hospitalizations could have been prevented by more effective drug therapy monitoring, timely recognition of the symptoms, and knowledge about certain risk factors for occurrence of these ADRs.

Sufficient knowledge and skills around the safety of medicines and safe use of drugs in daily practice are important for all healthcare professionals including pharmacists who are directly involved in pharmacotherapy, to reduce drug-induced patient harm. Due to these reasons, Pharmacovigilance Program of India (PvPI) was launched with a broad objective to safeguard health of billions of people of India. Pharmacovigilance (PV) is defined as the science and events relating to the detection, assessment, understanding and prevention of adverse effects or any other drug-related problem.

Therefore, competence in handling ADRs in clinical practice is important, not only for patient safety in individual patient care but also for drug safety monitoring at a population level. Although medical and pharmacy students may recognize the importance of ADR reporting and express the intention to report ADRs, they are insufficiently prepared to handle ADRs and have inadequate PV competencies.
