

'Minecraft' is Coming to the Wii U on December 17th

While it might feel like Minecraft is all over the world, gamers have had to wait as the popular franchise launched on all other platforms of the company except Nintendo's. Today however, we have some positive news: after months, nay years, of waiting, the Japanese game maker has announced that the sandbox game is finally available on the Wii U on December 17th. As we expected, Minecraft will come with many add-on packs that will give budding builders the chance to get festive in the lead up to Christmas or play with characters from popular television and film shows such as Star Wars, The Simpsons and Dr Who.

Mojang is also taking advantage of the Off-TV Play feature on the Wii U to allow players to transfer their worlds onto their GamePad controller and allow other members of the family to take the TV. Minecraft will cost $30 when it launches on the Nintendo eShop North America next week. There's no word yet on how much Minecraft will cost in the UK or Europe.
