Registration Opens For Summer Jobs Program

Robert M. Coard, executive director of Action for Boston Community Development, announced the opening of registration for ABCD's 1980 Summer Job Program for Boston youth. The program, which has employed over 105,000 young people during its 15 years, is run in cooperation with the City of Boston and funded primarily by the federal government.

Called EASY, Employment Academic Services for Youth, the program is designed to provide work experience and training to economically disadvantaged young residents of Boston who are in or out of school, and to offer them the opportunity to work and learn in different occupations while earning the minimum wage. In addition to low-income youth, ABCD's program employs special needs and handicapped youth in positions that are appropriate to their capabilities and needs.

Young people from the ages of 14 to 21 who are Boston residents, are in or out of school, and who meet the federally defined standards for low-income families are eligible for participation in the program. Handicapped Boston youth are also eligible.
