Anybody can use the AppBounty but the main varieties of people who use it are the people who are looking to make and the program developers and ad networks who are looking to market the programs that they have.

For developers and advertising networks, AppBounty gives them an opportunity to get their app downloaded and analyzed by men and women.

Since the business requires their members get the app and test it out for at least 30 seconds, developers are assured that people will really be downloading and using their app.

This is a good opportunity for them to check out new apps before they really launch it to see how people are reacting to it. Now the other sort of users that see the program are individuals who are looking to earn.

They can also be split into two, the members that download and check out the app, and people who would like to be media partners.

The members are essentially the users who download and check out the programs that developers and advertising networks encourage in AppBounty. The business pays with credits they can exchange for gift cards and things.

AppBounty is supplying more perks for people that are deemed social influencers, such as permitting their credits to be converted to money.

What I Dislike about AppBounty

Obviously, there are also things about the program I didn't like, which is discussed below.

- The jobs and offers are limited, particularly if you are in a particular nation. This makes it tougher for you to rapidly make credits unless you'll concentrate more about the referral program.
- The earnings potential is quite low as the credits being compensated aren't that high.
- There's no cash option, which is probably my biggest dislike about the program. Unless you're a networking partner, there's no way AppBounty will pay its members in money, so this app is not something individuals can do in order to acquire additional income.
- Some people also complained that a lot of the gift cards AppBounty provides are constantly sold out, which makes it difficult to really redeem the credits earned.

AppBounty isn't a scam, but as it actually does what it said it can do, cover people credits for each and every program they download and use. They then can use their earned credits to buy gift cards they can use in Amazon, iTunes and Google Play.

Folks will only have to enable cookies in their mobile browsers and not view the websites in incognito mode.

They will have to be certain that the app their using is available for at least 30 seconds (however the longer the better) in order to really earn credit for it.

But can people really earn from AppBounty? The answer to that, obviously, is no, as the app now does not have options for cash payment for its members.

The only way to bring in a living from AppBounty is to be a social networking influencer and need to become their media partner, as every sign up will earn them 0.50.

The media may convert their earnings to actually cash once it reaches $50.
