You Can Now Place Sports Bets (Legally) in New Jersey

June 14, 2018

NEW JERSEY- (Nick Corasaniti and Rick Rojas, New York Times) - The line formed at the Borgata casino well before 11 a.m., the designated time that sports betting was set to begin on Thursday. There were a few gamblers who were prepared to wager thousands of dollars, and many others who wanted to make bets that were much more modest, arriving simply to be part of a moment that felt historic. Scott Cronick was among the first to make it to the betting window, following state officials and Julius Erving, the retired basketball player, in placing some of the first legal bets on sporting events in New Jersey. He bet that the Yankees would win the World Series, the 76ers would claim the N.B.A. title and the Cowboys would be the Super Bowl champions.

JAPAN- (Tomohiro Osaki, Japan Times) - Prime Minister Shinzo Abe's ruling coalition on Friday pushed through a Lower House panel a contentious bill that specifies rules about the planned structure of integrated resorts (IRs), which will incorporate casino facilities, further intensifying political tensions with the opposition. Friday's passage of the bill represented the first legislative step toward the ruling bloc's stated goal of enacting the bill by the end of this ongoing Diet session, which is slated to wrap up next week. As the panel called for the vote, a large group of opposition lawmakers, who do not support the legislation, rushed to gather around committee chairman Daishiro Yamagiwa in a popular gesture of protest, attempting unsuccessfully to sabotage the bill's passage.
