

Minecraft's Latest Snapshot Added Chat Reports For Safe Building

Minecraft is a game that you should play with your friends. Sometimes you'll all be mucking in to create something awesome, sometimes you'll be making mods to recreate Elden Ring, and other times you'll be looking at servers online to see what the world has to offer. Sometimes, things can get messy when you play online with strangers. This is exactly what the most recent Minecraft snapshot is aiming to fix.

The Minecraft snapshot 22W24A has arrived. It's heading towards 1.19.1 with some bug fixes, two brand new features, and some bugs fixed. <https://stockalicious.com/> is the primary feature. It allows you to report abusive messages in game chat. It's worth noting that the blog states that "any reports made during the testing period may not be taken into consideration," but the ability to remove players who are toxic is an integral aspect of any online game and this is a good move.

Chat reporting is available in the social interactions screen. You'll need to report individual chat messages and choose the appropriate category. This is likely to prevent abuse of the system. You can't create a generic report about a user. You must state what they did. The blog says that your report will be reviewed by a moderation team. There's no way to know what constitutes a legitimate and useful report but it's worth learning about it nonetheless.

The other major change is that you are now able to duplicate the incredible Minecraft allay. This can be done by giving them an amethyst-based shard, but duplicates come with the benefit of a 2.5-minute cooling time. This should ease worries regarding the amount of allay mobs there are. Plus there's always more of a cute thing, right?

In not much official news, we're hugely fond of this Mario Kart mod for Minecraft. It adds the karts that you enjoy in Minecraft, but it also adds some cool aquatic features.
