THE RACE RESULTS

SILVER IS GOLDEN

A championship that was shaping up as a march to glory for Fernando Alonso looks like turning into a pitch battle as Kimi Raikkonen stormed to a stunning lights to flag victory here in Monaco this afternoon.

After a stellar performance in Barcelona to ignite McLaren's title assault, the Woking team again employed an unbeatable combination of strategy and driver fireworks to win.

After stealing pole position Raikkonen blasted away from the start, holding off a first corner attack from second-placed Alonso.

In Barcelona, many had questioned whether McLaren were light-fuelled to achieve the pace shown there, only to be proved wrong. It was the same yesterday as Raikkonen set blistering lap times to carve out a healthy advantage over Alonso by the two-stop window.

And as Patrick Friesacher spun in the run to the tunnel and the safety car emerged, it was presumed all would refuel. As Alonso, team-mate Giancarlo Fisichella and a host of others dived in, Raikkonen sailed past.

Despite receiving enough fuel to get him to the race end, Alonso could do nothing about the times Raikkonen was doing and as the Spaniard's tyres degraded, Raikkonen cemented the lead he held to the flag.

The Renaults were in trouble. Tyres issues leaving them at the mercy of pursuers and in the closing stages Alonso was robbed of second by a hard-pushing Nick Heidfeld, who blasted past on the run down to the chicane. Team-mate Mark Webber effected the same move to deny Alonso a podium place.

RED BULLETIN WINNER

Hans Hug from Sportinformation in Zurich won the Red Bulletin bet, predicting a Michael Schumacher finish in sixth place. He was the closest to the champion's seventh and scoops 1170 euros. No one won the bonus which now climbs to 900 euros. See you at the Nurburgring!
