Spin is to use the graphical interface iSpin. The graphical interface runs independently from Spin itself, and helps by generating the proper Spin commands based on menu selections. iSpin invoked Spin itself in the background to obtain the desired output, and wherever possible it will attempt to generate a graphical representation of that output. iSpin knows when and how to compile code for the model checkers that Spin can generate, and it knows when and how to execute it, so there is less to remember.

For more information on running Spin directly, see the companion document Still within this first view, you can perform a basic Syntax Check, and a basic check for Redundancies, by selecting the corresponding buttons near the top of the screen. You can also get the Symbol table of the Promela specification printed out in the same way. The Automata View panel on the right hand side of the screen relies on the availability of the dot tool from the graphviz distribution. If you have it installed, clicking on the automata view button can display each proctype as a graph. Next, move to the Simulate/Replay tab, at the top-left of the display. This allows you to select a range of parameters for a simulation run. For now, just accept the default settings that are shown, and press the Run button, on the right, to perform a first simulation. ispin-sweepstake ispin-sweepstakes
