Goldberg Chocolates

Goldberg chocolates were born during the second world war, from a grandmother's desperation to provide her grandson with a makeshift dessert. Since the local markets had more empty wooden crates than actual produce, she ventured into the forest in search of whatever she could find.

She returned home with a basket of foraged fruits, cocoa beans and raw honey. These simple ingredients were concocted into a success that continues to evoke chocolate-stained smiles, like they did when her grandson tried them for the first time. In order to keep this fond childhood memory alive, he launched Goldberg chocolates.

It houses a diverse assortment of natural chocolates and confectioneries, that boast not a single trace of synthetic sugar. Apart from their health benefits, these chocolates are the taste of a grandmother's love.

Goldberg Worldwide produces high quality products using only the finest ingredients from the region, distinguished by great taste and health benefits.

What's in a Goldberg chocolate?

Calling the enchanting village of Kabardino-Balkaria their home, Goldberg chocolates contain the freshest ingredients from Russian forests and raw honey from Mount Elbrus. Not only is the honey sweeter because of its natural extraction, it also hails from the highest mountain in Russia. Goldberg's sparkling water Originating from the shared wealth between Russia and Europe, Goldberg's sparkling water calls Mount Elbrus its home. On its journey from Mount Elbrus to your bottle, the sparkling water travels through one of the world's last virgin ecosystems. The water filters through layers of rock, gradually gleaning the natural minerals and electrolytes that give our products its silken taste. Goldberg's sparkling water is housed in a natural aquifer, deep beneath the earth's surface, where it's directly bottled at the source. This prevents the exclusive product from experiencing human contact. Well, until you unscrew the cap.

Mount Elbrus is a jewel in Russia's crown, and this sparkling water is one of the country's ways of sharing its wealth with the world. Established in 2007, Goldberg's sparkling water has continuously been quenching thirst and maintaining its reputation in the bottled water industry. Its mineral and microelement content not only meets, but exceeds international standards.

Your experience is our priority, and thus we maintain a stringent quality control procedure. Our unwavering attention is maintained right from the first step to the last. Everything from processing, packaging, transportation and storage has been carefully monitored. We aspire to maintain our position in the international bottled water market, in our customers' homes and in your heart.
