Mobile phone secret codes are the digital codes assigned to the mobile software by the user for the security purpose. They are also called password to open the specific programs.

These codes are helpful in protecting your mobile from an unauthorized use. To operate your mobile set or to place any call these codes should be enter but only emergency call or specially-programmed numbers may be placed without these codes.

Basically these default codes are last digits of your phone number or the last four digits of your social security phone number "1234"or"0000". There are basically three types of lock code.

- Carrier lock
- Keypad lock
- Security lock

Carrier lock is also called Sim lock or subsidy lock. This code is applied by the carriers on the request of the customer. Some third-party companies also sell these codes.
To unlock such code special numeric passwords are to be entered.

Keypad lock code prevents the unintentional or accidental presses of your mobile keys or button when placed in your pocket or purse.

These codes are very simple to open just by pressing or holding down only one or two specified keys.

Security code prevents other then owner to operate mobile phone. In the case if activated accidentally then user manual or carrier customer service will inform owner about the default code.

There are also some secret codes. With these codes you can check software version of your mobile phone or IMEI, reset to default language and deactivate the sim lock codes.
