However, the two compounds are not similar in any way; in fact, Duchaine would recant the statement, but the initial statement has been enough to keep the rumor alive. If Equipoise shares anything in common with another anabolic steroidal hormone, it would be testosterone, but EQ as it's commonly known is unique in its own right. An important note regarding the differences in these two steroidal hormones; Nandrolone carries a strong progestin nature, while Boldenone carries no progestin characteristics.

Testosterone is metabolized in various tissues by 5-reductase into DHT, which is 3- to 10-fold more potent as an AR agonist, and by aromatase into estradiol, which is an estrogen and lacks significant AR affinity. In addition, DHT is metabolized by 3-hydroxysteroid dehydrogenase (3-HSD) and 3-hydroxysteroid dehydrogenase (3-HSD) into 3-androstanediol and 3-androstanediol, respectively, which are metabolites with little or no AR affinity. 5-reductase is widely distributed throughout the body, and is concentrated to various extents in skin, prostate, seminal vesicles, liver, and the brain. In contrast, expression of 5-reductase in skeletal muscle is undetectable.

Manic disorder in psychiatry is specifically defined as "a state of abnormally elevated or irritable mood, arousal, and/or energy levels". Hypomania, which is mania of a lesser intensity, is defined in psychiatry as "a mood state characterized by persistent elevated euphoric-type or irritable mood, as well as thoughts and behaviors that are consistent with such a mood state". Mania and hypomania are not conditions that refer to deranged, berserk, crazed, or demented individuals/activity, nor does it refer specifically to violence or violent acts. Hypomanic behavior, when channeled and controlled properly, can in fact be extremely beneficial in driving an individual to accomplish challenges and tasks. The first factor is that of the mass media preying on the ignorance of the average individual among our population. steroid to cut fat involves a close examination of the context that these 'Roid Rage' stories and news reports by the mass media are construed to the general public. Every time an extensive news item concerning anabolic steroids winds up on the TV and in the general media, 'Roid Rage' is almost always branded with the news item, and the two words 'Roid Rage' are frequently scrolled across the TV screen in bright, big, bold letters. The most obvious example case to examine should be the unfortunate tragedy of Chris Benoit in 2007, who was a former WWE wrestler who murdered his family followed by killing himself. Once it had been discovered that Christ Benoit was a former regular anabolic steroid user, the media would then predictably focus exclusively upon anabolic steroids as the prime causative factor in the tragic incident. Such brain damage is very common among professional wrestlers, and especially boxers. Health risks can be produced by long-term use or excessive doses of AAS.
