

As a result of the pandemic, many people have been working from home over the past year. It's looking as though a good chunk of those will have the option of continuing to work remotely for at least part of the week. In the early days of this, many people made do with temporary setups. As weeks stretched into months – with the potential for permanence – there's been an ongoing move to upgrade the WFH experience. New computers, new monitors, new desks, new webcams, and new office chairs. Vitrazza has a suggestion for one element of home office upgrades that's often overlooked: the chair mat. The Colorado-based company sells American-made Ace Floor Mats .
