A NEW HOPE

Ever since the election, I have been hopeful that President Trump could prevail in his case against the Biden campaign. However, our chances seem to be dwindling significantly as the legal cases have given us very little results as the day of the electoral vote approaches. The past month has felt quite disappointing. There have been many setbacks, and. It was what truly solidified the idea that something drastic needed to be done soon. Because of these setbacks, for the past two weeks or so I have been thinking about ways we could become victorious in the situation we are in. I think I may have come up with an idea which may help us. In short, it is the one constitutional way how President Trump can directly take control of the situation in a way that no activist judge could challenge. In fact, as it turns out, there is a totally constitutional way for the President to initiate fully national martial law in a way that no activist judge could challenge it.

How?

It all relates to Habeas corpus. Habeas corpus is a little hand me down from english common law added to the constitution by the founders. It also is something which the president has the ability to temporarily revoke via executive order. This is based on President Lincoln’s precedent during the civil war - where on August 8th 1862 he suspended habeas corpus nationwide for the duration of the Civil war through proclamation 94. This presidential ability to revoke Habeas corpus is the main feature of this plan. What does that do? Well, in short by suspending Habeas corpus it gives an enforcing body the ability to detain anyone they wish for as long as they want without trial. So, if Habeas corpus is suspended, as long as the police/national guard is loyal to Trump - all he will have to do to order the arrests of Biden & associates without any judicial repercussions will be to institute the insurrection act. which allows the army to arrest anyone the President deems necessary to arrest. The insurrection act also applies to times of conspiracy (https://www.law.cornell.edu/uscode/text/10/253 which our current situation clearly is an example of. With the insurrection act he will be fully in his rights to order the Armed forces to carry out orders of arrest - and its combination with a suspension of Habeas Corpus will prevent activist judges from blocking the enforcement of the insurrection act. However, there is a catch to habeas corpus. According to the Habeas procedure of the suspension clause (clause 2) located in article 1, section 2 of the constitution "The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it". Or to be more concise, for Habeas corpus to be legally overturned there has to either be a civil or external war occuring at the time of the order. If those sorts of situations aren’t occurring, the Supreme court will simply overturn the decision - even if we have a majority conservative supreme court they will still invalidate our actions if they see them as unconstitutional. At this time, there is no major war which is occurring which fits this bill. This is why to remove Habeas corpus we unfortunately have to create one. One against an enemy large enough for us to consider a threat to public safety due to their actions against the US and/or its integral institutions. And I believe that Iran seems to directly fit the bill for this sort of conflict.

Why Iran?

Well, this is specifically for one reason - and it directly involves the voter fraud which occurred. It was stated specifically by the FBI that Iran had directly accessed voter registration data (https://www.fbi.gov/news/pressrel/press-releases/joint-cisa-fbi-statement-iranian-apt-actors-obtained-voter-registration-data). Sure, the FBI did say that the Iranians didn’t get to meddle with any of the voting data (despite gaining access to some non-public over data). However, a crime is a crime and even if it failed this was a serious attempt to damage the election’s legitimacy and sway its results. Seeing how Biden wants to end sanctions via the Iran deal (which have caused serious damage to the Iranian economy), and end the “Maximum pressure” policy of President Trump - Iran has a lot to gain with a Biden victory. Also, the FBI is well known for “toning down” their failures specifically to prevent panic - so it is quite likely that the Iranians may have gotten their hands on more than what the FBI is letting on. After all, in any cheating incident - Biden would need the hacking power of a major state to create the millions of votes needed to win the election by the margins given and slip them in without issue. As he simply doesn’t have the funds to create a massive cyber specialist team like a nation would - he would need to enlist the help of a foreign actor to get such capabilities. Seeing how America’s allies rely on US support - they cannot afford to risk the loss of this support by flagrantly attacking the American government’s legitimacy and the incumbent’s livelihood. So, only enemies would likely be willing to aid in subverting the US election. The US has five major enemies - China, Russia, Iran and North Korea. North Korea doesn't have the specialists or funds to hack an election. Russia has bad blood with Biden, and knows that if Biden gets elected they will be given even more sanctions - so they have no reason to help him. China might want to - however they have far too much to lose if they get caught as their entire economy depends on products sold to the west. As such, by process of elimination this leaves Iran as the most likely perpetrator of any election fraud. Like it or not, if Biden stole the election, Iran almost certainly had a massive role in it. If we can directly connect allegations of voter fraud to Iran - we will have a surefire Casus-Belli for war against them and their allies. Seeing how such a ploy would certainly show us - it would also show us that Iran is big enough of a threat worth suspending habeas corpus over. It also would make Joe Biden a “threat to public safety” due to his cooperation with the enemy - meaning that it will be fair game to arrest him and anyone associated with him once a war begins and Habeas corpus is dissolved. Sure, civil rights groups like the ACLU may oppose this - however with the suspension of Habeas corpus they too could be detained if they become too annoying.
Why do we need such a drastic measure?

Well, this is for three reasons which are Bill Barr’s regression, the lack of victories in court (including the supreme court) and the certification of vital states. Starting with Bill Barr. Bill Barr’s betrayal effectively ensures that the Justice department will not even attempt to prosecute the perpetrators of voter fraud. This means that the Trump legal team is on their own - and even then the perpetrators may come off scot free. And despite their positive attributes - I highly doubt that they will be able to get the perpetrators prosecuted via judicial means seeing how many judges have completely thrown out the idea of voter fraud. This brings us to the next point. We are only 2 days from the electoral vote and yet there hasn’t been a lot of tangible victories or progress. Sure, we may have the truth on our side. But as said before, the activist judges assigned to the cases have been throwing out the cases without even allowing the Trump legal team to show their evidence. Even the Supreme court - who was supposed to be majority conservative, just rejected the case almost immediately after they received it. Seeing how almost every judge assigned to these cases has proven to be some kind of activist - it has been effectively guaranteed that the courts will not help us at all. And because of this, many of the states have already codified their votes. In fact, almost all of the states we vitally needed including Wisconsin, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Arizona, Georgia and Nevada have certified the results. And sadly, there has never been a precedent in history where a state legislature “unconfirmed” the victory of a candidate over their state. As many of the needed states have all already codified their popular votes despite the fraud allegations - I don’t see how the lawsuits will be able to change those results even if the courts hold up the lawsuits. With this situation at hand, the only way to ensure victory is through direct presidential action. As such, a combination of a suspension of Habeas Corpus and institution of the insurrection act seems to be the only way that President Trump can truly overturn the current given results. It would give President Trump the ability to directly order the detainment individuals without the interference of the judicial system - including Joe Biden himself. It also would grant Trump a full victory as now Biden would be effectively nullified from the electoral process through his detainment. And more importantly - for aiding and abetting a criminal it would give him the ability to detain the electors which the democratic party will send. From there, it will be a matter of forcefully creating a “second round” for the electoral college (under the idea that the first was deeply corrupted) and getting the republican legislatures of many swing states (Arizona, Pennsylvania, Georgia, Wisconsin and Michigan have republican legislatures) to send in their own, republican electors - and we will have a majority of electoral votes. This will grant President Trump a codified, legal second term.
President Trump is very likely aware of this possibility. However, seeing how drastic and uncertain such an action would be, he is almost certainly not going to do this unless he believes that such actions would be backed by his supporters. After all, the action would be incredibly drastic and war could certainly turn unpopular. There is a good reason why he seems to be faltering at the moment, as now he faces the choice of either having to take drastic action not seen since the civil war or let Biden take office. However, if we can prove that we are willing to support such a drastic measure to keep him in office - I have full confidence that Trump will take such an opportunity and use it as well as he can. We only have 2 days left before the electoral college votes and codifies a Biden victory, so we will need to act fast. And the only way to do so is to contact him directly and in large numbers. After all, even though President Trump doesn't read all of his mail if we send enough messages eventually one will end up on his desk. And at that point, perhaps it may be what makes us prevail.

So, here are the contents of my plan for us:

1. Go to the linked website (here: https://www.whitehouse.gov/get-involved/write-or-call/ ), showing us two ways to contact the president. Decide if you want to send a physical note or an email.
2. In your preferred method, write a draft letter informing the President about how an Iran war would really help him out in this election dispute against Biden (via the ability to suspend Habeas Corpus) and how you/your fellow supporters will be willing to support him if he does follow this path. This will be hard, but it will be best to keep the notes concise. I will be writing an example message on the general post.
3. If you are writing a physical letter, add this address as the “send” address (The White House/ 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue NW/Washington, DC 20500) and your return address. If you are writing a letter, fill out this form ( https://www.whitehouse.gov/contact/ ). Add the contents of your draft message into the “Email” box.
4. Send the message.
5. Because the president doesn't have the time to look at all the messages he is sent, we will need to send as many messages as possible to him. As such, we will need to get as many people as possible to also send messages to him.
6. When it comes to provoking a war with Iran, I would personally say that it would be best if we would put forward an idea on how to do it. We may not be military experts, however not doing so will likely mean that President Trump and his advisors could waste vital time deciding how to strike Iran to initiate this plan. I would personally say that the best way to provoke war would be for the US ships in the Persian gulf to directly open missile fire on Iranian military installations in the South of Iran - in a similar vein to how we struck missiles on Syrian bases in 2018 except on a larger scale. We already have an effective casus-belli in what occurred with the election results, so such an overt strike would be proportional to what has occurred to us. The anti-Iranian alliance (Israel, Jordan, Saudi Arabia, the UAE, Bahrain, Hadi Yemen and Kuwait) already want war, so we will have their backs no matter how the war begins. And seeing how Iran shrank back from open war even when their General was killed last January - it seems as if we will need to be overt if we want open war to commence. Such an idea would probably just need to be added somewhere in the contents of your message.

Oh, and here are the answers to a few other questions you may have:

How long would martial law last? If President Trump goes through with this plan, it will be completely up to him to know how long martial law would last. However, I doubt that it would last longer than a few months as that would be ample time to arrest and detain the people needed to be detained.

Is a US president legally able to start a war? Yes, the President is fully able to invade effectively without congressional approval. This is as in the past 70 years, the precedent has been set that presidents can instigate wars and send in reinforcements on their own volition as commander in chief of the army. This precedent has been set in wars such as the Vietnam war, the effective unwarranted occupation of Syrian territory and the invasion of Libya.

What allies will we have in the Iran war? The US has many allies in the Middle East which we will use in this war. As stated, there is the explicitly anti-Iranian section of this alliance - Israel, Jordan, Saudi Arabia, the UAE, Bahrain, Hadi Yemen and Kuwait. Then, there is another bloc of countries which could support us. Its leader is Turkey - the country with the most powerful army in the middle east and the second most powerful member of NATO (only after the US). Even though President Obama did alienate Turkey in the past President Trump has been able to reverse some of that. The biggest part of the reversal was the withdrawal from Northern Syria in 2019 when President Trump moved his forces southward. This action allowed Turkey to create a large buffer region there to ensure Turkey’s security from local terrorists which have been bothering them. This has boosted Turkish national security and also significantly grew the amount of territory owned by the Syrian resistance - which has come under their wing lately. Turkey’s alliance consists of Azerbaijan, North Cyprus, the Libyan GNA government, Qatar and the Syrian rebels. This might not sound like much, but they will grant us lots of additional manpower and the ability to fight Iran on several more fronts. Combined, all of the allies listed here would give us over a million more soldiers to use in this war. As such, we won’t need to make as big of a commitment as we otherwise would have needed to. Iran may be a large threat, but with such a large amount of manpower we will have them on their knees within a year.

*Who are Iran’s allies? Iran’s allies are the governments of Iraq, Lebanon and Syria alongside the militia groups Hezbollah, ansar-allah/houthis, Hamas and assorted Iraqi militia/insurgent groups. The only two of them which could turn out to be an issue are Iraq and Syria as Iraqi soldiers have received US arms & training due to their shared war on Al-Qaeda & ISIS while the Syrian army has received lots of Russian weapons and training.

The US army brass is controlled by the military industrial complex. This is normally a very bad thing for us, as it means that they consistently butt heads with the president and inhibit parts of his foreign policy when it comes from withdrawing from wars. However, this time it may actually be an advantage. You see, many of them have been wanting a war with Iran for the past 20 years (although for more nefarious reasons than those provided here). By declaring war on Iran, many of them might actually see President Trump in a better light - perhaps they may even side with us. This absolutely could make them more willing to follow orders involving instituting martial law - giving this plan a higher chance of succeeding. Think of this like giving them what they want so that they have an incentive to give us what we want in return.

Will the Iran war turn into WWIII?
Honestly, the answer to this question is a pretty solid no. Sure, Iran may be allied to the US's largest enemy China however I don't see the Chinese government risking nuclear armageddon over Iran. Iran may be a strong ally - but China will always have the possibility to find a replacement as long as they don’t turn this into a nuclear war. However, I can absolutely see China providing weapons and supplies to the Iranians and their allies specifically to ensure that they hold out for as long as possible. This will make it harder to defeat the Iranians, but it still won’t prevent the inevitable. In fact, it might even just be a blessing - as it will leech plenty of money from the Chinese government which it otherwise would use to grow its sphere of influence. However, just because this isn’t WWIII doesn’t mean that it will still be a large war. Iran is allies with Syria, Iraq, Lebanon, Hamas/Gaza, the Houthis and Hezbollah - while also seeming to have a strategic alliance with the Taliban. Combined, they have millions of troops. We have better tech and higher manpower (when allies are included) but they still are large enough to be considered a serious threat to US interests.
