

How to Make a Large Wedding Intimate

Large weddings usually lose the intimacy of the occasion. And you wouldn't want that to happen. More than letting your guests feel welcome, you want them to feel the love the occasion is supposed to stir up so that it will be easy for us, your Gold Coast wedding photographer of choice, to capture heartfelt moments all throughout the ceremony. Here are some things that will make your large wedding feel intimate.

Romantic Lighting. Depending on the venue, romantic lights conjure that feeling of intimacy. Let romantic lighting, from candles to string lights to paper lanterns, induce romance and love as these make the largest of venues feel cosy.

Seating Arrangements. A tried and tested idea is having your guests share a table with people they haven't met yet. This will open conversations about how they know you and your partner, aside from having your guests make new connections.

Guest Involvement. Have your guests, friends and loved ones, get involved in your large wedding. The most common way to do this is through guest speeches or candle lighting. There are creative ideas that you might want to consider, like ring warming or lighting a unity candle.

Personalised Notes. Aside from a personalised "thank you" note for the wedding gifts, it's a great idea that you have a personalised note on the escort cards. Your guests will feel very special receiving a handwritten note, and they will feel more included during the event.

A Lounge Area. Comfortable couches and lounge chairs are a big hit during weddings. Have a devoted lounge space where your guests can mingle. It can also double as an area for a photo op.

There are many other clever ways of making a large wedding intimate, but the ones mentioned above are designed to make your guests feel relaxed and ready to be captured at their most candid moments with you and your partner by Sam Wyper, your preferred Gold Coast wedding photographer.
