Cupped Floors

cupped floorCupping occurs when the sides of flooring are higher than the center of the boards. The surface of the board has a concave shape or the surface curves inward.

Buckled Wood Flooring

Bucked floorBuckled wood flooring is due to leaks or high moisture. This occurs when the wood flooring pulls up from the subfloor, raising the floor's edge in one or several places.

Squeaky And Loose Floor Boards

Annoying floor squeaks, is very common in many homes anywhere in the world. It normally occurs after the house has settled and flooring lumber has dried out and shrunk. Usually, boards rub against each other that produces the squeaky sound.

Gaps Between Floor Boards

This is a very common problem with older wood flooring as the wood shrinks over time. Floors that are exposed to excessive heat are highly prone to this problem.

Mold Damaged floorMold Damaged Wood Flooring

Mold can grow in any building, old or new. It's only a myth that it only grows in old houses and old wood floors. It is important to act immediately on this problem as it is dangerous to one's health and mold can grow rapidly at anytime and anywhere.

scratched floorScratched Wood Flooring

This is the most typical and most inevitable wood floor damage. It is commonly caused by moving furniture, pets, and trailing rocks and debris from the outside. It is also the one of the easiest to be repaired.
