WHO WILL PROTECT OUR CHILDREN FROM AIR POLLUTION
AND RISING
ASTHMA RATES?

NANETTE BARRAGÁN ISN'T AFRAID TO STAND UP TO THE POLLUTERS

There's only one candidate we can trust to stand up to polluters and big oil companies to keep our families healthy: Nanette Barragán.

Throughout her career, Barragán has shown a deep commitment to protecting the air our children breathe and the water they drink—because pollution puts too many at risk for asthma and cancer.

When oil companies tried to drill off our beaches and in our neighborhoods, Barragán helped lead the fight to shut them down.

State Senator Isadore Hall, in contrast, has received nearly $150,000 in contributions from the oil and gas industry,¹ and he votes to protect their interests in return.²

We need Nanette Barragán fighting for us in Congress to keep the air we breathe and the water we drink clean and safe for generations to come.

NANETTE BARRAGÁN IS THE BEST CANDIDATE TO REPLACE JANICE HAHN IN CONGRESS³

Los Angeles Times
[O]nly Barragán has demonstrated the integrity, courage and commitment to the environment that this industrial district needs. Voters should choose her on June 7.³

And politician Isadore Hall?

According to the Los Angeles Times, Hall's record raises "major red flags."

For example, "[Hall] consistently opposed crucial climate change policy." And on top of that, Hall "did not join his colleagues in calling on the federal government to halt offshore drilling leases, or vote for a statewide ban on plastic bags, or a moratorium on fracking."

The Times further notes that "[Hall's] consistency was rewarded by the oil lobby, and he is one of the top recipients of donations from oil interests."³

NANETTE BARRAGÁN IS THE ONE YOU CAN TRUST TO PUT YOUR FAMILY FIRST

For Nanette Barragán, strong families are at the root of her values. As the youngest of 11 children raised by parents who came here from Mexico, she understands how important it is to give families the opportunity to succeed.

With her parents' encouragement, she beat the odds and went to UCLA and USC law school.

As a lawyer, Barragán helped immigrant families stay together, and she currently represents children to make sure their schools meet their educational needs.

As a Councilmember, she helped expand after-school programs, improved parks for disabled kids, balanced budgets, and increased crime prevention measures.

In Congress, Barragán will fight to make sure all families—regardless of zip code—have the opportunity to succeed.

The Barragán Plan for Families: More Opportunity. More Security.

Strengthen Social Security and Medicare. Make sure we protect the critical retirement safety net for current and future retirees, and expand Medicare access to cover more uninsured.

Increase Wages. People who work hard and play by the rules shouldn't live in poverty. Increase the minimum wage to help lift up families.

Protect Our Air and Water. Pollution puts too many at risk for asthma and cancer. Barragán has stood up to Big Oil, and she led the fight to stop neighborhood oil drilling. She'll do the same in Congress.

“When I was young we didn’t have much, but there was a lot of love, and my parents worked hard to give us the opportunity to succeed.

“Today it’s getting harder and harder for families to give their children the tools to succeed. That has to change.

“I’m running for Congress to create more opportunity and provide more security for our families.”

Nanette Barragán for Congress

The youngest of eleven children raised by immigrants from Mexico, Nanette Barragán lives in San Pedro. She grew up in the Carson area, where she learned to swim at the Carson Pool and attended Stephen M. White Jr. High School.

Through hard work and perseverance, she beat the odds and graduated from UCLA and USC law school. She worked at the Clinton White House and for President Obama's campaign to ensure every eligible voter had the opportunity to vote.

As a lawyer, Barragán helped immigrants and currently represents children to make sure their educational needs are met by their schools. As a Councilmember, she helped expand afterschool programs, improved parks for disabled kids, balanced budgets, and approved crime prevention measures.

In Congress, Barragán will fight for all families—regardless of zip code—to have the opportunity to succeed.
