Alder on Bridge: In through a door for good defense

By Phillip Alder

If you are hoping to receive a ruff, you have to find an open door to partner's hand, an entry.

This deal was fun for East-West. How did the defense go against four spades after West led her singleton club?

South described his hand well with the immediate jump to four spades -- a strong eight-card suit and little else. Declarer won the first trick with the nine, the highest being a suit-preference signal for hearts, the higher-ranking of the other two side suits.

South played a trump and, when East discarded, won with his ace and continued with the spade queen. West won with her king and shifted to the heart two, the low card guaranteeing an honor in the suit.

East, trusting his partner, won with the heart queen and led the club eight for partner to ruff. (West had to be void because with the queen-to doubleton, she would have led the queen, not the 10.)

West knew that she could give her partner the lead with a heart to the ace. Then another club would promote the spade 10 as a winner. However, it seemed that South had started with 8-2=1-2 distribution. If so, after a heart to the ace and a club, South would discard his diamond, making a loser-on-loser play. Anticipating this, West cashed the diamond ace before playing a second heart. Then the third club resulted in down three.
