What is noticeable is their guarantee of a 100mbps speed while utilizing their proxies which is clearly not even possible on my existing web connection.

In reality, with a quicker regional connection, such a speed is likely more than possible. Once again, these are quick and cheap proxies, however that's where the positives end. Speed is a tricky thing to ensure. In reality, whatever speed they boast may be manageable on a personal server, which they also sell. The catch is that a proxy's speed is limited by the user's regional internet connection speed. With semi-dedicated proxies, the user shares the proxy with 2 others. While this is basic for semi-dedicated proxies, it's been reported that these packages are considerably slower. With the dedicated proxy, on the other hand, there was a little difference in speed with or without the proxy, which does mean that they are rather fast.
