ETC bought at .80-1 dollar (Dec 16) sold at 18-20 (May-June)
BCH never sold, but bought more at (300-500)

Those are my big two. I made some bitcoins buying low on some alts like Golem, Edgeless, Iconomi. But I never invested too much. I always try to keep my BTC portfolio to be 70-80% of my holdings.

Dont buy btc, its too late if you are not holding it. Just wait for a correction. As long as your alts are not doing too bad on FIAT, then dont worry too much

BTC stagnated and ETH was the hot shit. It may happen again next year, with some coins. but if you are holding some obscure alt, then i wouldnt get my hopes to high. Probably not, dollar wise it went down 25% when i bought. Its not a big positions so i dont really care. Good things are coming for them in the future. So thats why im still holding

I used to be in a paid group to learn TA and other shit. But in all honesty its not about that at all. Trend lines and Fib extensions are the only things i see that consistently work, everything else just muddles the water

The most IMPORTANT things that you need to know are 2: Trading psychology and Information. For trading psychology i found "Trading in the zone" books and videos to be useful. The most important thing is information. Do your research, try to stay along the lines of coins that are proven to work. That would be the top 10/20. Focus more on long term trades.

As habits, you should only get into a trade if you have strong convictions for it. The risk of a trade should be a serious commitment, you shouldnt be buyign shit just because someone on /biz/ ,twitter, or reddit said so.

Link is the prime example of this.

Dunno man. I have to admit im weary about the CME/CBOE thing. Worst case scenario would be that it causes a crash back to 1000-2000 levels and then kills any volatility, so good bye crazy gains, but then again there are other alts. So dont worry too much. If btc goes absolutely to the moon. like 30-50k. And never comes back, then people will start investing on something else.

Dude you are fine. thats a good portfolio. My BCH position went down 20BTC in the last two days, who cares, dollar wise im at my ATH. It will have its day to shine. Focus on dollars mate. I put 500 euros into BTC about a week ago and now I am up 100%. However, I'd prefer to turn this into more without just holding the BTC, although that seems like the smartest strategy right now considering the skyrocketing value of this shitty currency. I am a law student but since I dont pay student fees, and since I can basically take as long as I fucking want, day trading is an option to me. Should I bother? Was the investment too little? Should I just hold until BTC obviously starts to tank and cash out? 500 bucks really arent a lot to me so a bit of gambling wouldnt be too bad I guess. Whats the most likely route to succeed her? Blow some more money on stuff like XMR since its superior from a technological standpoint?

No, the only coin proven to be in a solid bull market so far is BTC. that may change in the future, but for now the majority of your portfolio should remain BTC. if you dont have any BTC, dont buy it now. The downside risk is much higher, than the upside. BTC needs to go to 33k just for you to do a 2x. not worth it

Read "trading in the zone" you need to understand your feelings first.

Read some basics about TAing. I only use trendlines and fib extensions, fib retracements. And only on coins with high liquidity. If you have cash ready. Start moving it to coinbase or bitstamp so you can buy BTC in a dip.

Be picky about the coins you buy. Wait for dips. Be patient. Its just like hunting. You don't go out and start shooting at anything that moves. You wait for prey that is worth something to appear.

How cutthroat did you have to be? I mean did you join and P&D groups or anything like that? I can see the advantage of it but I am not a ruthless businessman. I used to be a hardcore salesman and it made me hate myself so I can't go back there again. Even I can see opportunities to influence via here and Reddit and make some quick cash and that's alone without a group. Not to mention bots for trading and trying to influence the market if you get a big enough stack of something. I am basically trying to play this one fair, not going for the quick win but the slow and steady one. More the fool be me perhaps but I have time and patience. Mostly I am swing trading over the space of a day I make maybe one buy and one sell if that. That is only to increase my stack with the markets natural ebb and flow. Mostly I am focusing on good quality alts with potential to increase my satoshis (god the last few days...) before I invest in stables like btc etc. I think my major mistake apart from not having 60% of my portfolio in the main coins is that I didn't convert to btc before it started this Bullrun, you could see it coming but oh well, I am sure in time things will recover and I can increase my stacks of my alts which is the main thing providing they survive. thoughts?

the team is very professional and have been developing this project for over 2 years now. they have a lot of documentation on their site that is peer reviewed and have videos on their channel explaining what they're mission is in a way that's easy to understand. Charles Hodgkinson, one of the co-founders of ETH is heading the project and IOHK is working as the core team. It's aimed to be a 3rd gen crypto solving many of the problems that current blockchain solutions have. BTC was first gen and introduced the blockchain, ETH was 2nd gen and introduced smartcontracts and Cardano is third gen. Eth proved with crypto kitties that it can't scale properly and build complex dAAPS on it and POW is very energy intensive which means it will become less popular over time. The whole forking situation with BTC has also proven that a proper governance system is needed in blockchain currently. Cardano solves all of that. It's POS so you gain interest on your ADA, it has a proper governance system and has high assurance code making it less vulnerable to hacks like the parity wallet issue with ETH and allows it to scale and be used to complex DAPPS. It's large market cap and the fact that it was sold for $0.002 at the ICO made me skeptical but then when I saw that the ICO investors didn't dump it as soon as it went to 13 cents it convinced me that they actually believe in the project and it's not just another ICO scam or pump and dump. Just read the whitepaper and you'll understand what I mean.

If you are a beginner the most important thing to do is to survive. Invest on proven stuff, buying low slowly. If that pays off and gives you a 10-20x return now you have more capital to take more risks, and to manage better. But as a newb just be patient.

I started with 6k and have grown this much so far.

I'm debating selling my BTC and going into something else until it hits 50% gains.

I don't see BTC going to 30k+ that I would need to get significant gains at this point.

Just thinking strictly in terms of percentage gains, I'm fortunate to have made what I have do far, but it's going to be a slow hold from this point forward only holding BTC. Plus most alts are on sale right now and a nearly guaranteed 10-20% return.

Don't worry about the haters. Question - if you're in the states, did you pay short term capital gains on what you have? There's no way you held for a year+ without doing some trades?

Also, what's the best guide for someone with ADD but good visuospatial ability on technical shit. I kinda have an intuition of how the graph works, but not sure how/when to use things like the fibonacci you mentioned, or moving averages, candlesticks, etc. etc.

Also, what websites do you use for crypto & are there any you recommend?

If BTC is the only way to make money at this point, do you think it's too late to make good gains like you did? I mean it sounds like you made most of your gains going from $500 to $20,000, so I don't think bitcoin is going to go lower than $10k now.

Thanks in advance!

I use coinigy and bitcoinwisdom. And i have accounts on all major exchanges

>>4872744

I think a lot of good alts still have lots of upside potential. Sure BTC is having all the attention right now. But it wont be forever. There are coins that have lots of potential next year. From my portfolio you can see BCH, ADA, BAT, and CFI are my picks. Metronome will have an ICO but i wont invest on that until its out.

>>4872882

Instinct, usually buying at previous AT low helps. also when a floor that last days or weeks forms is a good indicator. The latter is usually a very strong indicator. I put a pic showing an example (BCH). I do buy some shitcoins that I see are interesting, but dont go too deep; For example I have some CFI.

>>4873033

Who knows, but i believe it has much more upside than downside potential. This is long term investment (aka holding for half a year or more)

>>4873130

No, wait for a dip at least.

>>4873211

Why do you think BCH will keep its value? Technically speaking, increasing the block size is just kicking the can down the road. Even if it surpasses BTC, it will be plagued by the same issues.

I am using coss as a placeholder. Have been trying to find a good decentralized exchange alt, but most don't qualify. In my opinion, the dx market will boom at some point, as governments regulate crypto more and more by the day. Do you have any suggestion I should look into?

Sadly I can't get more cash in, at least not meaningful amount. I live in a shit tier country and 250 is a monthly wage here. I also have to repay some of my parents loans. Things will get better, but not in the foreseeable future.

I have one simple question. I am a complete noob no-coiner looking to start investing in alt-coins. Do you think it would be advantageous to hold off until after bitcoin crashes? I assume the btc crash will take the alts down with it to decent extent, giving me a much better entry point. Thoughts?

This is correct. You need to be very picky about your choices, and stick to them. Now if you find something really shady about the coin you were investing on, or if things changed fundamentally, then thats a good reason to leave. But if everything is still rock solid, then stay put. Leaving because it hasnt mooned yet, or because is dropping on price is not the right reason. If any you should see it as an opportunity to buy more

Just google, trend lines, fib retracements, fib extensions. Thats literally all you need. Watch videos of people doing TA with these tools, I personally like Chris Dunn. Complicated indicators dont quite work on BTC since those indicators were not designed for crypto . They tend to cloud your judgement. You want to do the easiest trades possibles. Those are semi long term investments.

- 1) Research a coin you like
- 2) Decide how much you are going to invest
- 3) Separate it into trades buy into dips, or wait a floor to form
- 4) Hold unless something goes wrong fundamentally
- 5) Profit

I have most of my portfolio invested into OMG, I recently just sold what little I have of BTC. I think the project has great fundamentals and have been buying on dips. They are one of the most successful ICOS of 2017, they are backed by a major company, major updates are coming Q1 and Q2 next year, and they are based in Asia where crypto currency is being adopted the most (specifically Japan, also japs will adopt a coin just because it is japanese) My question is, do I keep dollar cost averaging into these coins I believe will do well? Is this going to be a working strategy? My goal was just to get to 50,000 (just a set number).

No, bitcoin high fee problem is real and LN is still too far away. A lot of companies don't like LN, and prefer on chain solutions since they already have the software to support it. You'll see next year big adoption of BCH. Does that mean BTC is going away? doubt it, but the upside for BCH is real. BTC is trading for 1200-1300, If BTC goes up to 20k. Do you think is unreasonable for BCH not to go to 5k or so? I personally think it will go even higher, I believe is undervalued.

I've heard people talk about investing $200 every month into different altcoins just to potentially make money off a moon.
Is that a viable tactic or do you think the overall growth of the whole ecosystem is over, and the best you could do is make your money back?
Should I just do 200 into XMR/ADA/Link and whatever else in the future into BTC and just sit on it for years?

OP, have you heard of QTUM, also should I hold on to ETH or get something that could get more of a long term profit?

I bought ETH at $360 during the summer, it tanked, I held, and now it's up. QTUM hasn't done as much, but I genuinely believe that the technology behind the coin is powerful. what do?

Student debt isn't that pressing. If your income is low you barely have to pay anything. Also they don't really come after you like other creditors. Stay in the game anon. You've got a good portfolio. Even if you never make another trade and just hodl all of that, it's gonna be worth a lot more in a year to three.

Its been around for a while. I don't see anything special on it. Can you make money out of trading it? perhaps if you buy low enough. Is it worth my time? No

As I said, be very picky about your coins. Its not a good idea to own like 10 different cryptos. specially if you dont have a big portfolio

Interesting, thanks for the feedback.

I find the idea of having a distributed, decentralized, and uncensorable worldwide hard drive pretty exciting. Worldwide data doubles roughly every 18 months - having a way to store, share, and utilize that data faster than any central authority is appealing to me. They also have a working product, an excellent dev team (ranked among the highest), and the storage capacity of the network is growing quite quickly.

To each their own, though. Have a good one and best of luck.

Yes as in today, I think it might rise to 0.11-13 range and stabilize.

And I would not sleep on IOTA that much. I work within the animal science industry with big data. They recently partnered with cornerstone norwegian companies like TINE in regards to sensordata from automatic milking robots. They have already helped developed the citybike program here in Oslo. Small grassroot stuff like that tells me it is not vaporware.

I'm just doing a shitton of bounties and holding them until they're worthless or I'm a millionaire. Plus I buy into ADA and got a bit of a gamble going with a lowcap coin that has provided me thus far with 8x returns. I want to get more into ICOs but i'm not sure what ICOs are good. They're all fluff and marketing, their whitepaper is ridiculous it should be academic reviews but its just marketing and sales. I checked the stats on ICOs it seems only like 20 have given massive returns, the ones where you can lay down 1000 and get back 100k after 2-3 years. So how do I get involved with promising ICOs? Most of them are hype or controlled by whales it seems as they all dip really hard. Help please? Thanks in advance!
