

Gravity of Motion

Are you familiar with Minecraft? It has many fans however, I'm sure you've heard of it. Minecraft is a game that involves building with blocks in any way you can imagine. It's a game that encourages imagination and building. Players can build structures using cubes that are textured in a 3D environment. Gameplay in the commercial version is divided into two primary modes: Survival, which requires players to acquire resources themselves and maintain their health and nutrition as well as Creative, where the player has an unlimited supply of resources, the ability to fly, and has no concept of health or hunger.

On birthdays, our children awake to a home filled with birthday decorations.

I created Minecraft cups and plates for the table setting. I stuck a Minecraft face on the cups. For the plates, I glued a Minecraft face on green plates. Then, I glued (hot glue around the edges) the clear plate on top.

The table decorations were Minecraft blocks. They also had them hanging from the ceiling.

The kids loved them.

Follow this link to create the Minecraft blocks The Ultimate Guide to Minecraft Paper Products. They were surprisingly easy to create.

I designed my son's creeper shirt using freezer stencils on paper.

To make a birthday card I printed a few Minecraft images. Then, I used a Minecraft word generator to add the words I wanted to the Creeper signs. The generator is available here: Minecraft MemeGenerator

I purchased the Minecraft picture ax and used the packaging to create another sign with a decorative design. I made the Minecraft Steve heads using glue, paper card board boxes and cardboard boxes.

The Steve heads were a huge success with the kids. Here's a photo of my boys with them in the morning before school.

You can purchase Steve heads online but it was cheaper to make them, especially when I was making four of them.

I found the Steve head template and directions here: SteveLange.net

For a snack in the afternoon, I made block brownies.

I created an Creeper Birthday Cake using green icing and chocolate bars.
Citizensnpcs.Net

It was a Creeper-filled Minecraft birthday celebration.

I am linking this post up to Works-For-Me-Wednesday.

My son's excitement for his birthday party worked for me. I spent a lot of time searching for ideas on internet. If you have an avid Minecraft fan in your home, I hope you will benefit from these suggestions and links.