

The Scroll of the Stars

(An account of the unsunken land where the tomb of Turin is and after the great war). The kingdom of the north shall be given to Kace. At this moment, it is belonging to Ancalagon. The mountain, full of gold, is the reward of Raymond; and he may give it to whomever he wishes. As for the kingdom of the vultures, it will be given to Loki. As for the Kingdom of Doriath, it is forsaken and evil. It will become a draconian stronghold. But the forest will be ours forever. Whoever wars it, is a scum. As for the Kingdoms that I have not mentioned, they are contained in the scrolls to come.

The words of Glarthir (aka Glarhorn aka Glarth) the Prophet of the forest that he wrote when he was told bad news. This was what I was expecting all along. We already knew what would happen didn't we, prophets? Cobia will fall last and the rest of the world would be his. Then they will be celebrating when they fall. What can we say? Is it right to say "I can't fight, because I'm afraid?" Certainly not. Should you say: "I'm surprised!" A hundred years from now, we will look back at ourselves and say: "I'm glad I did not say: 'The prophets are liars. Their words don't come true.'" The stars in their places did not come about randomly, brothers. They came about by careful planning, and by a great hand of power (The One). Where should this star go? Where should that star go? Was it random? Certainly not! You are stupid. So this is what the stars are like:

"The stars are like diamonds sparkling in the sky. They glitter above forever."

Am I stupid? Do I think that just HAPPENED? No. The tale of how it happened is long. But I will say it shortly. In the weaving of the world, a bright light is born (who's name I have not mentioned). She was the daughter of beauty, called Snow White in the books of legend, but to you she is known by the Elvish 'Varda' meaning 'Reigning in the Heights Above'. And so she is reigning, in the heights above. Over what is her kingdom? 32842934923848 stars. Is that too many? Now stop PRAISING her. She is just a slave, a slave of God. God made the stars, because he is wise. And over them he appoints rulers. Now the ruler of all the stars is Varda. And then their are rulers over individual stars. For example, the ruler of Ila a star of the Anariai constellation in the cluster of Althëssa is Varda's sister Yavanna (IT WAS A GIFT). And then under them are the stewards of the stars and their planets. These are called The Protectors, Sons of the nameless who have no name. When a star is born this is what Varda says:

" S t o p      b u r n i n g arrogantly, rest and do not tire out. Because their are many years before your night falls."

And if that star does not listen and it becomes a O star, and grows too hot too quickly, this is what Varda says:

" Go away in your arrogance, you have no place among my daughters and sons."

So that star will burn out, and whoever was appointed to protect it will certainly die. That includes the protectors, who are arrogant. But if any of them say: "My lady, have mercy, I am not arrogant." She will be kind, it is not in her nature to let the power get to her head.

And if a star is calm and burns in a slow way, Varda will say to it:

"Here is your name [___]. And come and be part of my family. I say that your ruler is [____] and your protectors are [_____]."

And Varda will look after that star like a mother looks after her children. In love.

Cursed be Varda, cursed be her star kingdom, and cursed be the sisters of Varda and her daughters. Why should Arda suffer from Ancalagon and not be helped by her? So this is what Glarthir, the Prophet says!

"M a y V a r d a b e overthrown by a Queen more beautiful than she is. And may her sons and daughters become O stars, and burn away. Unless she comes to our aid on the day we need it the most!"

(So Glarthir wrapped up the scroll and put it in the hollow of a tree trunk and said of that tree: "Tree, keep my words, and do not forget them. Maybe it will be that Varda changes her mind and actually helps us?")

When Varda was young, about a few thousand years old, she came to meet a great Ainur Lord who was very powerful. This Lord was Manwe. I don't know how they met, because it happened beyond Arda, and the confines of our world. Any knowledge outside of Arda is forbidden! By the time she and Manwe came to Arda as lovers, fully married and with children, the earth already was, and over it were the protectors of the sun of the solar system of the earth; the ruler of the sun was:

Lady Eärendil

And her protectors were according to her: C102, I9,

AL2, B8, AL0, K13 and someone else. So Manwe and Varda ruled Arda for a time, and Varda was making the stars more beautiful, especially the morning and evening stars. But one star was red. Anyway, Manwe died. And then Varda was mourning Manwe (THIS WAS A LOT LATER). Then, Varda for some reason forsook us all. So I have no sympathy for her. But if she changes her mind, is the forest not merciful? This is the history of the stars in our solar system:

How many stars are in our solar system?

Just one! But in old times, there might have been more (but idk). But this star is VERY special because it is the sun of life. And God made the sun very special. Does it burn too hot? No. Does it burn too cold? No! Is it too big? No. Is it too small? No. Is it too old? No. Is it too young? No. So this is why the sun is special: Because it is the most special of all the stars, because it is the home of the forest.

Varda pretty much does not care about the sun! She just let it go to Pythas! And then pythas let it go to Rouge the Fire Daughter (by rent). Then the contract was void because Varda acted for once! And she gave it to her daughter who is called Luna the Lady of Winter Skies. But the prophecies of the forest are also for the stars, so when I say: "The sun will burn forever, and its ruler will be a just ruler." Can I be lying? Is any daughter of fire a just ruler? Certainly not! Unless it is green flame. If you see her, clap at her and say: "My lady, may the star burn forever." However, Luna is not like her mother, she is loyal to Arda! So blessed be Luna. But if she goes away, cursed be Luna and may her sun be given to the fire nation forever. Can Ancalagon rule the sun too? Certainly not!

I'm done hearing that name anyway. The prophets have spoken! Anyone who comes to Arda from the heavenly realm and says: "This is where I am to live forever." must go to the forest and become a forest boy/girl. So in the days of old, there was a girl in the forest called Little; and Glarthir knew about her. They became friends. But she didn't know who she was. She was actually Luna (daughter of Varda). But she had fallen in love with the forest of earth and because my father (Pythas) already saw her, Varda made sure she was hidden from his sight. (Because he knew he could overtake the Star Kingdom if he could make Luna fall in love with him). So Pythas was trying to lure her, but Varda was smart. Manwe also was smart, so he made this vow to the forest: "Forest, protect my daughter at all costs, even cause her to forget me if that is what it takes."

So the spirit in the forest, (aka Nameless One), heard Manwe and realised that Pythas was the most attractive of all the boys/men on the surface of the entire earth and in space and in heaven. Nobody was like him, not even his son Accal was as he was in appearance. And Pythas was easily going to make Luna his wife.

But Nameless One, seeing how bad he was in the heart and how bad things would become if this happened, caused Luna to fall in love with the forest instead. So Luna said to her mother: "Mother, I am not leaving this place. For here, I am at peace." But Varda said: "My daughter, do not stay here, for I am leaving this world. Come back to the stars." But Luna said: "It is like nameless one is making me stay by making my heart in love with this place." And that place was beautiful.

By the time Pythas got to the forest, and tracked down Luna, why look! She was already reborn as a human. (Because she did not stay with her parents, and her memory was wiped of them, because He (nameless) was saving her from his evil hand."

And Pythas looked around and said: "Where is she?" But thinking she was gone (but she wasn't), he went back to his wife, Melody, and that night Nook was conceived. When he was born, Nook looked like his brother Glarthir, but was born too early, and so he was very small. And Nook was small from the day he was born. He was given the name: "Nook" because he was small. It was Melody who named him, but Pythas wanted to call him "Thirhan" aka "Hanthir". But the name "Nook" stuck.

All that time, Melody didn't know she was being cheated on! At that time, Melody was still beautiful, but not as beautiful as Luna was. But Luna was gone, because she was now Little. And Nameless One said: "Little will be safe in the forest." But the forest burnt down a while later, and Little was not safe any more, because she became evil. But she was doing it half heartedly. It was actually thanks to her, that in the same place of her birth, Pythas was slain in the second dimension by Saberai. Then, in the third dimension, Luna returned. But Pythas had succeeded to make the Sun his. But then Varda stepped in.

That is the end of the scroll.
