DAYTON, Ohio -- Dr. Raymond Wolf is a cosmetic surgeon practicing in the greater Dayton, Ohio area, specializing in laser vein therapy and vein treatment. He specializes in the early and proper diagnosis of venous disease and associated conditions such as Chronic Venous Insufficiency (CVI) and Deep Vein Thrombosis (DVT). Recent data released by the American Society of Plastic Surgeons \(ASPS\) estimates that 50% of women over 21 in the United States have spider veins. Women are more likely to develop spider veins and varicose veins than men, however it is more likely to increase between both men and women with age.

His unique approach to spider vein and varicose vein treatment has provided a great deal of relief for the many patients that visit his office on a weekly basis. In a recent video broadcast he addressed this issue by saying, "You've taken the first step towards better looking and feeling legs. During your consultation a screening Continuous Wave Doppler will help identify whether you have reflux, which is necessary for the diagnosis of medical venous disease. You will also be visually examined to see if you have cosmetic venous disease." The entire video can be seen below.

Spider veins and varicose veins can be hurtful both physically and to the spirit. These conditions are painful and limiting, but with laser light and other methods they can be safely treated. Spider veins, also known as roadmap veins, are very tiny superficial blood vessels that increase in size over time and commonly occur on the legs. Sclerotherapy is considered the gold standard in treating people with spider veins. Varicose veins are larger, dilated blood vessels that can be raised above the skin's surface and have a rope-like appearance.

Laser therapy is a highly effective treatment for varicose veins, in which tiny laser fibers are applied to the vein through a needle puncture. Dr. Raymond Wolf can diagnose and effectively treat patients with all forms of venous disease with these advanced treatment methods to maximize their results and minimize their downtime for recovery.

He addressed this topic with his statement, "Your consultation is the best way to find out what type of venous problems that you have and a complete evaluation may follow after that. Treatments range from Endovenous Laser Ablation to Topical Laser Treatment for Spider Veins which also includes the treatment called Sclerotherapy."
